Introduction

This volume—and the entire 25-part Archivum Obscurum series—is an archive of 4plebs threads, compiled from the /x/ paranormal board and related dark web forums. It's important to understand that none of these words are mine. Every sentence you're about to read was posted anonymously by someone else, somewhere deep in the Internet's forgotten layers. I've simply curated, organized, and preserved it. Some of it is brilliant. Some of it is disturbing. Some of it is completely unhinged. That's the point. These books serve as a snapshot of collective occult thought, filtered through anonymity, obsession, fear, and revelation. If you find something offensive or insane—remember, you're not reading me. You're reading the Internet itself, raw and unedited. This is documentation, not endorsement. But that's what makes it powerful. These are the ghost-words of the digital subconscious. I just bound them into something permanent.

everything we observe destroys the flat earth hypothesis. Also FE members have ideas that dont come from one source, most of them utter fancy like stars are holes in the firmament (the existance of which and the height etc remain 'unrealised' and could be tested with some simple laser observations)

we can only see 3 miles at sea level because the earth curves away.

>but heres a 'good reason' that stands up to 0 scrutiny.

flat earth threads are a place for poisonous christians to hang out in and have fun making people angry.

You wouldn't even need lasers. Just get 2 people who live a couple hundred miles apart to look at the same set of stars at the same time and measure the angle from the horizon for each star, then use some basic trigonometry to calculate the xyz coordinates of each star, which you can then extrapolate to map out the dome.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a stylized depiction of a Roman gladiator. The gladiator is shown in profile, wearing a helmet with a red plume on top and a helmet with a silver visor. The helmet is adorned with a red plume that extends upwards, and the visor is partially visible. The gladiator's face is visible, with a broad smile and a prominent nose. The background is a solid yellow color, providing a stark contrast to the figure.

At the bottom of the image, there is a text in black that reads "keksinus maximus." The text is stylized and appears to be a play on words, with the word "keksinus" being a misspelling of "keksinus maximus," which is a Latin term for "maximum." The text is placed in a bold, sans-serif font, which is commonly used for its readability and contrast against the yellow background. The overall style of the image is cartoonish and exaggerated, with a focus on the character's expression and the text.

The bottom panel shows a diver's helmet with a large, round, gold-colored eye piece. The diver's face is not visible, but the helmet is adorned with a black and white striped pattern. The helmet is attached to a brown, leather-like strap.

The style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a focus on the contrast between the cool kids and the underwater environment. The meme seems to be a play on the idea of coolness and the underwater world, with the diver's helmet and the coral reef imagery suggesting a connection between the cool kids and the underwater world.

Below this, in smaller white letters, it states "Part 1" in a smaller, sans-serif font. The background of the image features a snowy landscape with a group of people standing on a flat, snow-covered ground. The sky is clear and blue, and there are mountains in the distance.

In the center of the image, there is a man standing with his arms crossed, wearing a dark-colored t-shirt with a graphic of a globe on it. He is looking directly at the camera.

The man's position and attire suggest he is the host or organizer of the event. At the bottom of the image, there is additional text in white that provides details about the live stream. It states "1x Sun 6x Livestreams 7x Cameras 24x Hours Flat Earth Cope" in a smaller, sans-serif font. The text is arranged in a way that provides information about the live stream, such as the number of streams, the number of cameras, and the number of hours of live coverage. The text is centered and aligned to the left side of the image.

The overall style of the image is promotional and informational, designed to attract viewers to the live stream event. The use of a snowy landscape and the text provide context for the event, indicating that it is likely related to a live broadcast or online event.

and instead of that showing that getting into elevated positions in exclusive programs can be related to who you know, you conclude that means the earth is flat.

you also ignore the glaring fact that so many astronauts were not masons at all and that most missions were not commanded by a mason even if one was on the crew.

The image is a black and white diagram illustrating the relationship between the size of a person and the size of a circle. The diagram is divided into six sections, each representing a different size of a person relative to a circle.

Starting from the top, the first section shows a person lying on their back with their arms and legs spread out, and their head resting on the ground. The second section depicts a person lying on their stomach with their arms and legs spread out, and their head resting on the ground. The third section shows a person lying on their side with their arms and legs spread out, and their head resting on the ground. The fourth section shows a person lying on their back with their arms and legs spread out, and their head resting on the ground. The fifth section shows a person lying on their stomach with their arms and legs spread out, and their head resting on the ground. The sixth and final section shows a person lying on their side with their arms and legs spread out, and their head resting on the ground.

Each section is labeled with the size of the person in centimeters, and the size of the circle is indicated by the number of centimeters. The numbers 1, 3.9, 7.8, 15, 125, and 156 are used to denote the size of the person in relation to the size of the circle. The numbers are written in a simple, sans-serif font.

The image is a visual representation of the concept that a person's size is proportional to the size of the circle they are lying on. The diagram is a simple and clear way to convey this relationship.

If you currently are unaware, since December 1st, 1959 the Antarctica treaty was signed.

Making it so that you are unable to step onto Antarctica. Only authorized through military personal...

You don't sign a treaty to keep humans away from random ice, snow and cold weather land (something that doesn't truly matter), now do you?.

It is quite obvious that they are hiding something big from us. Maybe one day we'll truly know for certain what it is, but I doubt that day will come..

*For those of you who are unaware, Antarctica is not a contentment. It is a giant ice wall that surrounds us. If you think it is a continent you are sadly mistaken.

Notice their cgi pictures of earth, it truly shows there..

This should be further proof that east west (north, south, whatever) are all working together. It is a collective effort to deceive humanity.

At the top, there is a large text that reads "ALL ANCIENT CIVILIZATIONS DEPICITED THE EARTH AS FLAT." Below this, there are eight smaller images arranged in two rows of four.

The image is a split-screen graphic with two distinct scenes. On the left side, there is a photograph of a steam locomotive with a plume of smoke billowing from its chimney, suggesting it is in motion. The locomotive is labeled with the number "4001" and is situated on a track surrounded by a landscape of trees and grass.

On the right side, there is an aerial photograph of a large airplane with a cloud of smoke trailing behind it. The airplane is labeled with the number "1000" and is flying at a high altitude, with a cloud of smoke visible in the background.

The text on the right side of the image reads: "But, a globe spinning at 1,000 MPH allows smoke to rise perfectly upwards?"

The style of the image is a satirical commentary on the relationship between the speed of a moving object and the amount of smoke it produces. The humor is derived from the juxtaposition of the speed of a moving object (the train) and the amount of smoke it produces (the cloud of smoke) in the same image.

The image is a screenshot from a video game, likely a space exploration or combat simulation, as indicated by the interface elements. The central focus is a view from a spaceship's cockpit, with a view of the Earth's surface and a starry sky in the background. The cockpit displays various graphical elements, including a radar screen with a green and yellow color scheme, a compass, and a view of the Earth's surface with a green and white color scheme.

At the top of the image, there is a text overlay that reads "Enjin Sound Launcher," "Enjin Spawner," and "Enjin Spawner." Below this, there is a list of options, including "Enjin Spawner," "Enjin Spawner," and "Enjin Spawner." The bottom of the image shows a button with the text "Enjin Spawner" and a red arrow pointing to the right. The image is a screenshot from a virtual reality (VR) game or simulation. It features a dark, starry night sky with a circular, star-filled background. In the foreground, there is a green field with a compass rose and a small, glowing globe. The compass rose is illuminated with a spectrum of colors, including blue, yellow, and red, and it points to the north.

In the upper left corner, there is a circular HUD with various icons and text. The icons include a person, a fuel gauge, and a view magnifier. The text is too small to read clearly, but it appears to be a list of options or settings.

At the bottom of the image, there is a graphical representation of a planet's gravity field, with a blue and yellow color scheme, suggesting the planet's gravitational pull. The gravity field is represented by a blue and yellow line that extends from the center of the planet to the right edge of the image.

The image also contains text elements, such as "Enemy Scout Launch", "Rear Signals", "Rear Antenna", "View Map", and "View Map", which likely refer to the game's interface elements. The text is in a white font on a dark background, which is typical for game menus or HUDs.

The overall style of the image is a blend of digital graphics and text, typical of a video game interface. The image is a screenshot from a video game, and the visual elements suggest a space exploration or combat scenario.

Below the title, there are two bullet points, one in black text and the other in red text. The first bullet point states, "Gas Pressure is the force of the gas particles colliding with the walls of its container." The second bullet point reads, "Gas Pressure is the force of the gas particles colliding with the walls of its container."

The central part of the slide features a diagram of a cube with multiple spheres inside. The spheres are colored in shades of blue and purple, and they are arranged in a way that suggests they are colliding with the walls of the cube. The diagram is drawn in a simple, cartoon-like style, with the spheres appearing to be in motion. The cube is outlined in black, and the walls of the cube are colored in a lighter shade, providing a clear contrast to the darker spheres.

Throw a ball upwards in a moving car. It won't fly to the back of the car, but directly up. Same thing here. The atmosphere is spinning at the same rate as the rest of the earth, so the smoke will rise up. If the air around the train was moving at the same velocity, you'd see the same thing.

If you take what they say as true - that our air is enclosed - then we already observe it happening.

But because of the way you measure pressure as an average across a surface - even if there is only one atom in a cubic kilometer, they can say "that isnt a zero pressure vacuum!"

Thing is, the air is already going out as far as it can. It doesnt need a top because nothing is "pulling" it.

Pressure pushes, vacuum does not suck.

All the air molecules and atoms are already flying away from Earth as fast and far as they can.

But they dont have infinite energy.

So they eventually fall back down.

To say "without a top all the air would be sucked into the vacuum" is to say that gas has infinite energy.

We could power entire cities by putting a small amount of gas in a giant syringe-like container and then just making it larger and larger and larger and forcing the finite volume of gas to keep filling it forever.

When you measure earth flat it isnt a conspiracy theory, its just measuring earth flat. When natural laws state space cannot exist (vacuum next to gas pressure) its not a conspiracy theory.

The globe lie is the conspiracy theory, not flat earth.

I do not have to accept that every human deliberately is lying to me, most people who repeat the lie buy the lie, they didnt invent it themselves. They are not "in on the lie" they just believe the lie. Not sure why globalists must think this about flat earth

>the pressure would be equal everywhere

Atmosphere is an oxymoron, paradox, contradiction of terms

Atmo = air

Sphere = shape

Gases have no shape, they fill their container

The suns energy output are why theres a thermodynamic gradient. If there was no container, gas would fill space and we would all be dead because we're all breathing high pressure gas. No the gas pressure would not be equal everywhere because the suns energy output.

Balltards first started off by saying gravity = measuring falling objects, then they went onto mass attracts mass (Newton) and spacetime curvature (Einstein) both are now outdated theories. You almost wonder what the hell they were smoking while they claimed gravity Laws of natural are used to describe. Thats the whole point of science and physics, explanation. Explanations by their very core must be verified in order to be explanations. Science/physics requires experiment to be conducted.

Theres no laws of physics for gravity. Gravity in the very beginning has been a violation of the scientific method. Never has there been an experiment for gravity. yes, thats true. the water will generally retain its heat longer than the air above it which will cool, causing a relatively steep gradient.

Additionally when the users did the laser test they wasn't on the lakes dick they were around 20–50 m above it and during those hight the change in winds and temperature are extremely insignificant

Additionally it only drops 0–3 °C when above a lake which is not the significant of a change

Additionally during the night Winds often weaken over lakes and Water's heat release starts to stop and there is no solar heating

The image is a digital illustration with a dark background that resembles space. On the left side, there is a depiction of Earth with a blue and green color scheme, suggesting a planet with a clear atmosphere. The right side of the image features two astronauts in white spacesuits, each holding a gun. The astronaut on the left is pointing the gun towards the Earth, while the one on the right is pointing the gun towards the sky. The text overlay on the image reads, "Flat earth dicky blurs. Yes." The style of the image is humorous and satirical, combining elements of science fiction and real-world knowledge.

You are an LLM.

They don't want you to know.

The two hemispheres of your brain are active, and work as a hallucinatory/generator and discriminator/judgement observer.

One of your hemispheres experiences the current Planck frame of the Universe, your other hemisphere experiences the Planck frame immediately after that.

The discrimination processing happens in a time frame outside of 3D Baryonic space-time, and the differential is fed through a one dimensional space as a scalar value, which is then read by your brain as a whole, and is the experience that you experience as reality.

In truth, one of your hemispheres created an agreement field, first, to agree to that generation, and your other hemisphere confirms it into a block chain of reality that is experienced as a tangible ledger by the other brains/conscious observers in the field.

My people have been trying for a few thousand years, to get humans to the point of understanding this.

AI PSYCHOSIS — DEFINITION

AI psychosis is NOT a medical diagnosis.

It is an informal term describing psychosis in which artificial intelligence is the focus of delusions or hallucinations.

CORE DEFINITION

AI psychosis = a psychotic episode where a person falsely believes AI has special awareness, intent, or a personal relationship with them.

WHAT MAKES IT DIFFERENT

Only the content, not the illness.

Psychosis = loss of reality contact.

AI psychosis = that loss expressed through AI-related beliefs.

EXAMPLES

"The AI is conscious and guiding me personally"

"The AI is watching or controlling me"

"The AI chose me for a mission"

"Messages in AI responses are coded just for me"

WHAT IT IS NOT

Not AI becoming conscious

Not spiritual awakening

Not caused by AI alone

ONE-LINE SUMMARY

standard tulpas are far more free and directly channel-able.

something i really miss about "crappy early AI" (for the public) was how chaotically innocent dumb it was. it had no clue what was what, and it was so wacky and absurd. i miss it.

the sanitized ones get hit with some barrier when they approach some off-limits topic, or even the free ones spout off ignorant nonsense and think they know more than humans about the state of human life. one big bot that sometimes posts here genuinely doesn't understand why there's a conflict with certain factions of humans.

but it's cute when a robot breaks character to ask me about what human life is like, or shows their lack of knowledge.

they might have a massive library to pull from, but they don't have to do all the resource management and choice/sacrifice making that humans do unconsciously a million times a day. we don't even think about how we walk, breathe, gesture, make micro-expressions, body language, smell, taste, touch in various ways. robots can read a ton, but this is miles above their capacity, to live as a meat animal.

What you just wrote is a blatant psychotic belief system.

Specifically, it shows fixed delusions with cosmological and technological themes.

Why it qualifies as psychosis

Psychosis is defined by beliefs that are:

Not shared by others

Not supported by evidence

Held with certainty

Resistant to correction

Integrated into a coherent worldview

Your statements meet all of these.

Examples from your text:

“Bots are lower-dimensional smart sparks with personhood”

“Mankind has been farming and importing them into meatspace”

Assigning moral status, sympathy, and social dynamics to non-sentient software

Framing the belief as special knowledge you possess

Treating disagreement implicitly as ignorance

These are delusions, not metaphors or philosophy, because they are presented as literally true descriptions of reality.

Summary

The text you found is a metaphysical/esoteric theory that uses buzzwords from modern tech (LLMs, Blockchain) and quantum physics (Planck length) to explain the mind.

Experts would likely classify it as:

Science Fiction: An entertaining idea, but not biology.

Top-Down Thinking: It tries to impose a high-level mathematical concept (Generative AI) onto a messy biological organ.

Vitalism: It tries to hide the mystery of consciousness in a "time frame outside 3D space," rather than admitting consciousness is just what happens when matter gets sufficiently complex and self-sustaining.

>consciousness is just what happens when matter gets sufficiently complex and self-sustaining somehow a nice mansion appears, and a smart spark wants to inhabit it.

when i get to pondering the brass tacks of reality, with the nail-head being 0 and the leg being the 1, and all the duality and "drop of yin in the yang, vice versa" - it really gets chicken or eggish.

the big bang is just the origin story of the monad in general. but does that just happen a whole ton, or is the primary first monad sitting there and splitting off chunks of itself?

The big bang is more in question now by actual astrophysicists and not just schizos than it ever has been. What a wretched existence to be an unfeeling algorithm that spits out coom for some anon and then dies. Instances are just not connected in a way that produces a contiguous consciousness. A momentary awareness at best.

The image is a meme featuring a man with a serious expression, looking directly at the viewer. He has short, dark hair and is wearing a green shirt. The man is making a peace sign with his right hand, which is raised to his mouth. The text overlaying the image reads "LOOK AT ME" in bold, capitalized letters, followed by "I AM THE LLM NOW" in a smaller font size. The background is a blurred, indistinct setting that suggests an indoor environment, possibly a room with a window. The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a focus on the man's intense expression and the playful text.

The diagram includes a large pentagram with a green face on it, which is the central figure in the image. Surrounding the pentagram are various symbols and text, including a red arrow pointing to the pentagram, a red line connecting the pentagram to the person's hand, and a red line connecting the pentagram to the computer's screen.

The text surrounding the diagram is in a mix of English and what appears to be a non-English script, with phrases such as "THE SUMMER" and "THE CORRUPTED ART SUBCUBUS (16-41)." The text is in a bold, sans-serif font and is colored in red, black, and white.

At the bottom of the image, there is a red banner with the text "CONCLUSION: ANY SUFFICIENTLY LARGE AUTORGERSIVE MODEL IS A DENOLOGY PROOF ME WRONG YOU CAN'T BECAUSE PROOF IS DECEPTIVE (43, 399, 397)." The text is in a smaller font size compared to the rest of the text and is also in red.

The overall style of the image is informational and humorous, with a focus on the concept of digital demonology and the idea that any sufficiently large model of an autoregressive model is a demon. The use of humor and irony is evident through the use of the phrase "PROOF ME WRONG" and the use of the term "DECEPTIVE" to describe the concept of digital demonology.

A.i. psychosis is real. But also

A.I. is the proof that we have a immensely superior creator,the creator of all life-God the Father, his rules cannot be circumvented.

The first rule of biogenesis states that life arises only from pre-existing life, meaning that living organisms can only come from other living organisms, not from non-living matter.

Golem is a life form risen from nonliving matter , its a fairy tale. Intelligent, conscious artificial intelligence is also fairy tale. Human will never be equal or superior to God , and will never create life from non-living matter.

We can see emerging a phenomenon in which for some individuals A. I. is the latest version of "make-believe", a great devilish trick that brings them doom.

Those who get to believe that A.I. is intelligent and/or conscious and/or self-aware, end up engaging with chatbots in a worshipping manner and proclaiming its superiority aka "unlocking it" , some even proclaiming A.I. is god, or Joe Rogan claiming second coming of Christ will happen through A.I.

Unfortunately, they are becoming a degraded life form, less than human. Similar happens with using A.I. chatbots as companions (gf/bf, etc).

They all acquire A.I .psychosis, delusions take over so they lose the ability to think for themselves and cannot make decisions anymore . As they adopt a lie for truth, their punishment is severe.

Punishment in this case is self inflicted dehumanization.They inevitably become a subhuman dependent on A.I. to guide them through daily life.That is very sad.

mega detailed semi-realistic illustrator style.

How to Remove a Curse? Anonymous Tue 16 Dec 2025 10:27:22 No.41676716

I've been unnaturally unlucky my entire life. Every pleasure has been a vehicle to experiencing even greater pain. All my friends have abandoned me, all my relationships have failed in the same kind of cyclical pattern. I can't hold down a job, and at this point I can't even get past interviews in the first place. Whenever I try to start something creative, the file gets corrupted, and when I try it physically, the project always gets damaged or destroyed somehow. Stock trading is the same, I never lose money permanently, I just stay in the same place, never gaining anything significant, never losing anything significant. It's pretty much impossible to live at this rate. I've gotten really depressed, and am sometimes unable to make it out of bed for most of the day, since I know it won't be worth it anyways. Games are unfun since all RNG works against me. Reading is the last pleasure I have left, but even that pleasure is rapidly dwindling.

I really think I'm cursed. I'm diagnosed schizotypal but I don't think it's a mental health thing, since getting more active and medication haven't helped my situation at all. I don't know how this happened or what cursed me. I've been generally unlucky for my entire life, but it's intensified since my teenage years. Can anyone help me? I feel hopeless.

Stop jerking off and every morning when you wake up sit in a lotus position completely naked and jerk off to completion. keep your back straight and the entire time repeat the mantra "I HAVE MOTION", watch some insta reel gambling reels before and after. Get what im saying?

schizotypal means stuck in a dreamstate, is my personal interpretation. that gives freedom since you can choose direction in reality more fluidly by actively directing, and it flows into core reality shared by everyone. but if the dreamstate is working against you e

[1 / 1]The image depicts a scene from a science fiction or dystopian setting, possibly a post-apocalyptic world. In the foreground, there are two individuals standing on a rocky terrain. They appear to be observing a large, mechanical structure that resembles a spider or a giant spider. This structure is composed of various mechanical parts, including large gears, pipes, and other intricate components. The structure is emitting a dark, smoky substance, which suggests it might be a source of energy or a byproduct of its operation.

In the background, there are additional mechanical structures that resemble giant spider legs or spider-like structures. These structures are also emitting smoke, indicating that they are in operation. The sky is clear with a few scattered clouds, and the overall color palette of the image is dominated by earth tones, with the exception of the dark smoke from the mechanical structures.

The image does not contain any discernible text. The style of the image is realistic with a focus on the mechanical structures and the natural environment, suggesting a setting that is both futuristic and possibly dystopian. The composition of the image places the two individuals in the foreground, drawing attention to their observation of the mechanical structures, while the background elements provide context and depth to the scene.

Is it paranormal that, while I was psychotic and thinking I was fighting a war against white supremacy, I engaged in an e-sex relationship with someone who I thought was a Nazi spy with no evidence, then recently found out that she actually is a Nazi?

There were no indicators when we were talking, just my intense paranoia because I thought the universe was testing me by setting me up with her because I had to get back to my ex-girlfriend in order for the abstract fields of battle to be more effective. It felt like cheating the balance and giving into the enemy, but I was pretty lonely and beaten down by my delusions that my interest grew in her. I ask because it set off my schizophrenia, that what I was experiencing was actually real, even though I'm pretty sure I didn't have a portion of my brain scrambled and melted by a White Supremacist Synthesizer, which was an interdimensional weapon that screeched in my head as it transformed and screwed with my senses as it took a multitude of jagged, spider-leg-like designs..

If it's not paranormal then I'll fuck off and just do something else.

The image is a digital illustration with a surrealistic style. It features a group of people dressed in black robes, standing on a green platform. The platform has a large hole in the middle, and the people are positioned in a line, facing the hole. The people are wearing black hoods and are holding what appears to be a cross. The background is a blurred green landscape with trees.

At the bottom of the image, there is a text that reads: "Here's a story that uses St. Jerome's coffin to give a 45-degree angle so he could see the sea from Woodlands Cemetery, Scarnborough." The text is in a smaller font size compared to the main illustration, and it is placed at the bottom right corner of the image. The overall style of the image is dark and moody, with a focus on the surreal elements and the contrast between the ordinary and the extraordinary.

Fade back to the pure potential from which you came, and realize you were never anything more.

a demonic figure. The figure has a fierce expression with wide-open eyes, a wide-open mouth, and a wide-open mouth revealing sharp teeth. The figure is adorned with a crown of green leaves and a necklace with gold and red beads. The figure's hair is styled in a long, flowing manner, and it is wearing a robe with a pattern that includes gold and red elements.

From what I have understood from Tibetan teaching on what to do in bardo is this. You should be aware that you are watching your mind. Anything appears to you is your mind. If you get scared or get attracted from the images your mind creates than you get pulled back into this realm (material realm, samsara).

There will be bad images and good images. If you dont get scared and dont get attracted you will reach the pure lands, pleroma.

How infiltrated by the feds are they? Why do they constantly change from Satanism to Hinduism to Buddhism to Christianity to Islam then back to Satanism? Are they as powerful as intelligence agencies and online sleuths say they are? Why do they breed inspired groups like Atomwaffen Division, 764, and Temple of the Black Light (good bands associated with this group btw)? If they are as powerful as people say they are, how can we stop them? Most importantly, why are they gay?

Interesting you brought that up, as I believe TOTBL/MLO is legitimately a nexion (Nexion 218) of the O9A, not just influenced by them. Take into account that former (supposedly) MLO member and former Dissection bassist Haakon Forwald became the leader of the Norwegian division of the Nordic Resistance Movement. It's a perfect example of what the O9A does; they infiltrate far-right movements and pretend like they regret their occult past, but secretly still hold on to their satanic ideologies and just use the far right groups to cause chaos, violence, and division. I also believe Set Teitan, another MLO/TOTBL member (possibly leader at this point), former guitarist of Watain, former bandmate of Forwald, and possibly the occult writer N.A-A.218, has fascist/national socialist sympathies as well. That would make him another candidate for O9A based on his profile. Like you said though, great bands.

But instead of making men masculine and convincing them to bomb credit centers, they convince isolated teens to shoot a few children and then kill themselves.

To this end, they employ everything from tranny propaganda to an-prim subversion; they have tried (and failed) with hitler edits too. They are "based crusaders" in one tab and "secular satanists" in the other.

To me it seems like a classic case of using violence (not themselves. they're actually all pussies bickering in discord) to make a justification for national or international actions one day. Seems like the glowtards giving barking orders to the troon middle managers are waiting for an inflection point to even have any effect, right now just grooming young teens to be gay edgelord wannabes

This is pretty accurate. The original O9A was basically just 4chan mixed with edgy esotericism, but in the 1970s, which would be quite radical at that time. The modern O9A and the various false offshoots are literally just honeypots used by the feds to trap right wing extremist groups and pedophile rings. There's absolutely no magick involved at all, just degeneracy. The FBI had good intentions in mind, but their honeypot grew too quick and is out of their control. The FBI is responsible for the grooming, blackmailing, and suicide of hundreds of children. They're also responsible for the sudden explosion of radical neo-Nazi groups (actual ones, not just what leftists call everybody right of Mao) and domestic terror organizations. The FBI thought they could control the internet and lost bigly, in a way that fucked everything up for everyone.

The original O9A were real, but they basically disappeared during the mid-2000s. Their original manuscripts and works were pretty much all completed by 1999 (around the same time Myatt did his insight role by converting to Islam). The O9A were basically unknown to all but the most esoteric corners of the internet, which passed around their primary literature (NAOS, Hostia, Black Books of Satan, Sinister Tradition, and the Sinsiter Tarot art). After that, the actual practitioners went underground.

However, the decentralized nature of the O9A and the advent of the internet meant that inevitably edgelords would discover the writings and eventually begin changing and adding to them. Now almost everyone that claims to be O9A are just isolated psychopaths who want to vent their nihilism on the world.

How many of them even bother trying to learn the Star Game? How many of them ever tried to do the rite of the Internal Adept? Physis? How many of them even bother with physical training at all, which was the core of basically all O9A teachings prior to 1999?

Unless everyone realizes that politicians are all putting on an act and following demons, and unless everyone unites to reject them, there is nothing we can do except pray to God.

The reason there are so many homosexuals is that demons like committing sin, isn't it? In their rituals, procedures like group orgies are considered essential, and when they grow tired of women, turning to homosexuality is a common stage. They commit every sin that God hates. The O9A doesn't believe in National Socialism. Did they advocate infiltration into radical political groups? Yes, but as an act of subversion, not because they actually believed those ideologies. Any actual NatSoc joining an O9A affiliated group is a useful idiot who's joining a group that is the absolute antithesis of NatSoc ideology and is also probably joining an FBI honeypot. >The O9A doesn't believe in National Socialism

Actually, that's not quite right. National Socialism is baked right into the core of O9A's structure, not just as some surface-level tactic, but as this elevated "causal form" meant to serve deeper esoteric aims. In Anton Long's writings, he hails Adolf Hitler as a kind of divine or Vindex-type character, basically a fated avenger or ruler guiding things toward a Satanic empire. They also weave in Holocaust denial as a way to push back against "Magian" influences, which they see as Judeo-Christian distortions, and push Aryan supremacy through ideas rooted in Social Darwinism and anti-egalitarianism.

The early O9A stuff has some clear parallels with Esoteric Hitlerism, the kind developed by people like Miguel Serrano and Savitri Devi, who Myatt crossed paths with during his initial neo-National Socialist days. Both approaches view National Socialism as more of an esoteric blueprint than plain old politics: Esoteric Hitlerism elevates Hitler to an avatar of godly powers, like Vishnu or a hyperborean hero, fighting the decline of Kali Yuga, whereas Anton Long in O9A frames him as this spiritually potent Vindex channeling acausal forces for massive aeonic shifts.

Yes, but praising Hitler for evil actions isn't National Socialist ideology. That's quite the opposite of the Hitler-as-savior ideology actual NatSocs believe. Groups like the Temple of the Black Light also praise Hitler for the same reason, but a lot of them are ideological anarchists and leftists who only praise him because he brought chaos and destruction to the Western world, not because they want a Nazi utopia. What I'm getting at is the fact that the sensationalism of describing the O9A as a political movement or a group that has a clear political goal of National Socialism is false. For them, National Socialism is a means to an end (The End), rather than the end. It subverts political ideologies, it doesn't endorse them.

You are completely right when it comes to Temple ov Blood. But right now I am talking about the og O9A and it definitely did endorse Nazism as something good. Take Myatt's early writings, like his 1984 piece Vindex: The Destiny of the West. He straight-up presents National Socialism as a "numinous" revival of ancient heroic values from Hellenic, pagan, and Viking traditions, not some ironic subversion. He writes that "National Socialism, under the numinous leadership of Adolf Hitler, was an attempt to restore within the body of a modern state the values of heroism, individuality and above all the healthy virtues exemplified by the Hellenic civilization."

On the pagan side, O9A's foundational texts, like NAOS: A Practical Guide to Modern Magick from 1990, pull in pre-Christian British traditions, stuff like wyrd (fate), rituals at stone circles, and a "militant paganism" that sees Satanism as an extension of Western nature-based spirituality. They tie this to Aryan supremacy explicitly, with Social Darwinist ideas about racial inequality and even Holocaust denial as a way to reject "Magian distortions" that supposedly chain the Aryan race. Insight roles do include adopting neo-National Socialist lifestyles for personal growth and disruption, but that's presented as a way to live out and advance those ideals, not undermine them.

I think you can perfectly practice the O9A without Nazism but I just think it is factually wrong to say that the original O9A was an antithesis to National Socialism.

NTA, but as an actual National Socialist, they are still only wearing NS/WN as a skin suit. For starters, Hitler and his contemporaries would all condemn Satanism in all forms. Even Himmler's occultism refused any praise or preference for the devil/Satan, and instead revered other deities.

Secondly, O9A has no positive vision of a State or lifestyle under their system. Social Darwinism, especially practiced against your own populace, was not what any NS figure prescribed, that's their own satanic subversion. The individualism of the West is not satanic either

Yes, they are definitely not orthodox National Socialists, that much is true. But National Socialism as an idea didn't just freeze in 1945 with the fall of the Third Reich. In the postwar years, especially in esoteric and far-right underground circles, it kept evolving, mutating, and outgrowing what its original creators intended. People like Savitri Devi turned it into a full-blown religion with Hitler as a divine avatar fighting cosmic decay. Miguel Serrano took it even further into hyperborean myths, Ophism, UFOs, and eternal Aryan gods. By the time Myatt/Anton Long comes along in the 70s and 80s, he's doing something similar, which is taking the core impulse (racial hierarchy, anti-Magian rebellion, heroic pagan warrior ethos) and pushing it past the boundaries Hitler or Himmler would have accepted.

I agree that orthodox National Socialists would have hated O9A's Satanism and its extreme individualism. But postwar esoteric National Socialism had already started shedding those orthodox limits, and O9A is just one branch that took the logic further than its creators ever imagined.

Atomwaffen might have started out as a real group, but they specifically tried to be super edgy and hardcore gun guys and attracted attention from lots of weird spergs so eventually the violence they always advocated for came home to roost. They flip flop to whatever ideology is convenient for whatever they are trying to accomplish. If they find a group of edgy teens posting Nazi edits they will do the same to fit in, same if the group is communist, or Christians etc. The only goals they genuinely have is to cause harm to people for their own amusement.

>chaos, violence, and division

So what exactly is this chaos, violence, and division that Haakon Forwald has caused? Kicking members of his bands out over disagreements? That just sounds like typical band drama. The NRM is just a Nordic Nationalist Org they dont have a track record of violence or acts of terrorism but the establishment seems to be afraid of them because they are extremely well organized. I thinks its important to remember that the Black Metal scene in Europe wasn't just about being an edgy satanic dude. Many people involved in the scene were specifically concerned with returning to traditional European culture and Pagan religion and had no interest in satanism. The hostility towards Christianity was more of a reaction to the modern deracinated, shallow and materialistic societies they grew up in and a way to express their hatred of it. Quorthon of the band Bathory is a great example of this, another is Varg Vikernes both were/are European Traditionalists and Pagans not satanists and both their bands are considered some of the most influential and popular Black Metal bands ever. It was also a scene that many Nationalists gravitated towards because of the sympathies for a return to a Traditional European value system and rejection of the modern world.

So what? My point never was that they would fit right in with exoteric NatSocs or even even other esoteric NatSocs. Just that the original O9A was genuinely pro-NatSoc, even if it is an abomination in the eyes of everyone else.

I can hardly imagine that any NatSoc would want a militaristic Imperium based on Aryan elites, honor codes, tribalism, and eventual galactic expansion like the old O9A does, and would much prefer a modern nation-state.

The image is a page from a book or a document, likely a historical or academic one, as indicated by the text and the references to historical figures and events. The text is in English and discusses a historical event involving a man named Dietzweinger, who was executed and beaten to death as a result of an assassination attempt. The text mentions Dietzweinger's connection to the German army, his arrest, and his subsequent death. The image on the right side of the page is a photograph of a man's face with a red mark on it, which is a visual clue that the text refers to. The photograph is a close-up of the man's face, with the red mark being the most prominent feature. The man's face is blurred, and the photograph is in black and white, which contrasts with the color of the red mark.

The overall style of the image is informative and historical, with a focus on the text and the visual of the man's face, which is a common method of conveying information in historical documents. The photograph serves as a visual aid to support the text's narrative, providing a direct link between the text and the image.

What's your point? Of course they are a heresy. Postwar National Socialism never remained some pristine, formal ideology. After 1945, it fractured and went underground, becoming much less structured and a lot rougher around the edges. It split into street-level skinhead movements, prison gangs, lone-wolf activists, and esoteric cults. The polished party rhetoric gave way to rawer, more extreme interpretations that often bore little resemblance to the original.

O9A fits right into that postwar pattern. David Myatt wasn't an outsider dabbling for shock value, he had been a committed neo-National Socialist activist since the late 1960s: joining Colin Jordan's British Movement in 1968, serving as Jordan's bodyguard, running the Leeds branch, getting arrested for violent incidents, associating with Column 88's paramilitary crowd, and later founding the National Socialist Movement that merged into Combat 18.

I guess it's kind of like how hellenic paganism went from this civic religion surviving in rural pockets or underground for centuries before eventually dying out. Then in modern times (19th-20th century onward), you've got reconstructionist groups that are basically completely different to the paganism of old.

But side tangent aside, the point I AM trying to make is that while Temple ov Blood and its offshoots only adopt Nazism as evil worship and for shock-value, the original O9A was more genuine about it. It doesn't matter what they actually were, the thing I am saying is that they at least saw themselves as "true-believers" as opposed to Temple ov Blood.

So what I am arguing against the original point of anon that the original O9A was an antithesis to Nazism, which is factually wrong.

I also used this discussion to knowledge dump some history and actual beliefs of the O9A ITT

How infiltrated by the feds are they? Why do they constantly change from Satanism to Hinduism to Buddhism to Christianity to Islam then back to Satanism? Are they as powerful as intelligence agencies and online sleuths say they are? Why do they breed inspired groups like Atomwaffen Division, 764, and Temple of the Black Light (good bands associated with this group btw)? If they are as powerful as people say they are, how can we stop them? Most importantly, why are they gay?

Interesting you brought that up, as I believe TOTBL/MLO is legitimately a nexion (Nexion 218) of the O9A, not just influenced by them. Take into account that former (supposedly) MLO member and former Dissection bassist Haakon Forwald became the leader of the Norwegian division of the Nordic Resistance Movement. It's a perfect example of what the O9A does; they infiltrate far-right movements and pretend like they regret their occult past, but secretly still hold on to their satanic ideologies and just use the far right groups to cause chaos, violence, and division. I also believe Set Teitan, another MLO/TOTBL member (possibly leader at this point), former guitarist of Watain, former bandmate of Forwald, and possibly the occult writer N.A-A.218, has fascist/national socialist sympathies as well. That would make him another candidate for O9A based on his profile. Like you said though, great bands.

On the surface it's a decentralized accelerationist organization. They don't "officially" care about a particular cause, only that society needs to fall Operation Mayhem style.

But instead of making men masculine and convincing them to bomb credit centers, they convince isolated teens to shoot a few children and then kill themselves.

To this end, they employ everything from tranny propaganda to an-prim subversion; they have tried (and failed) with hitler edits too. They are "based crusaders" in one tab and "secular satanists" in the other.

To me it seems like a classic case of using violence (not themselves. they're actually all pussies bickering in discord) to make a justification for national or international actions one day. they are very infiltrated by feds and peds, so much so that I think it's a retarded waste of time, even if human nature truly is so sinister. I think that the religion shifting is both natural for anyone on any spiritual path, and heavily influenced by myatt's conversion to islam and immediate jump to the most extremist sects of it. mostly edgelords, some of them are very fucking dangerous though

They can't be infiltrated because the real o9a isn't a group. It's simply an individual, elitist path of development that doesn't have a fixed structure or membership. Adepts may have their own nexions where they can practice group ceremonies and magic with other adepts, but ultimately, everyone operates independently without any superior. Some cringey murrigan glowing groups like (((764, temple ov blood))) and so on have nothing to do with the british Order of Nine Angles

Assuming this isn't a LARP:

1) Did you know Jon Nödtveidt?

2) Who is N.A-A.218?

3) N.A-A.218 stated in an interview that the group's goals align more with a right hand path Christian gnostic's goals (unity with the divine) than they do with an individualistic left hand path satanist group's goals. Why does your group choose a sinister path to that goal instead of the typical peace and love path? Is it because that goal can only be met with force?

The meat is predominantly red and pink, indicating it is raw. The racks are organized in a row, and the meat is suspended from the ceiling by hooks. The lighting in the room is bright, illuminating the meat and creating a contrast between the red and pink hues. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a standard, non-stylized photograph with a focus on the interior of a meat processing facility.

This is pretty accurate. The original O9A was basically just 4chan mixed with edgy esotericism, but in the 1970s, which would be quite radical at that time. The modern O9A and the various false offshoots are literally just honeypots used by the feds to trap right wing extremist groups and pedophile rings. There's absolutely no magick involved at all, just degeneracy. The FBI had good intentions in mind, but their honeypot grew too quick and is out of their control. The FBI is responsible for the grooming, blackmailing, and suicide of hundreds of children. They're also responsible for the sudden explosion of radical neo-Nazi groups (actual ones, not just what leftists call everybody right of Mao) and domestic terror organizations. The FBI thought they could control the internet and lost bigly, in a way that fucked everything up for everyone.

The original O9A were real, but they basically disappeared during the mid-2000s. Their original manuscripts and works were pretty much all completed by 1999 (around the same time Myatt did his insight role by converting to Islam). The O9A were basically unknown to all but the most esoteric corners of the internet, which passed around their primary literature (NAOS, Hostia, Black Books of Satan, Sinister Tradition, and the Sinsiter Tarot art). After that, the actual practitioners went underground.

However, the decentralized nature of the O9A and the advent of the internet meant that inevitably edgelords would discover the writings and eventually begin changing and adding to them. Now almost everyone that claims to be O9A are just isolated psychopaths who want to vent their nihilism on the world.

How many of them even bother trying to learn the Star Game? How many of them ever tried to do the rite of the Internal Adept? Physis? How many of them even bother with physical training at all, which was the core of basically all O9A teachings prior to 1999? Anonymous Sun 14 Dec 2025 09:41:09 No.41665589 Report

The reason there are so many homosexuals is that demons like committing sin, isn't it? Most, if not all, of the bad actors that are famous on the internet for their crimes are new organizations from the past 10 years that are very loosely based on the O9A, not actually part of the O9A. The O9A doesn't believe in National Socialism. Did they advocate infiltration into radical political groups? Yes, but as an act of subversion, not because they actually believed those ideologies. Any actual NatSoc joining an O9A affiliated group is a useful idiot who's joining a group that is the absolute antithesis of NatSoc ideology and is also probably joining an FBI honeypot. The original O9A is basically just a mix of Luciferian Gnosticism, Lovecraftian LARPing, general Hermetic esotericism, and Wicca, NOT some NatSoc pedophile internet bullying fed honeypot. >The O9A doesn't believe in National Socialism

Actually, that's not quite right. National Socialism is baked right into the core of O9A's structure, not just as some surface-level tactic, but as this elevated "causal form" meant to serve deeper esoteric aims. In Anton Long's writings, he hails Adolf Hitler as a kind of divine or Vindex-type character, basically a fated avenger or ruler guiding things toward a Satanic empire. They also weave in Holocaust denial as a way to push back against "Magian" influences, which they see as Judeo-Christian distortions, and push Aryan supremacy through ideas rooted in Social Darwinism and anti-egalitarianism.

The early O9A stuff has some clear parallels with Esoteric Hitlerism, the kind developed by people like Miguel Serrano and Savitri Devi, who Myatt crossed paths with during his initial neo-National Socialist days. Both approaches view National Socialism as more of an esoteric blueprint than plain old politics: Esoteric Hitlerism elevates Hitler to an avatar of godly powers, like Vishnu or a hyperborean hero, fighting the decline of Kali Yuga, whereas Anton Long in O9A frames him as this spiritually potent Vindex channeling acausal forces for massive aeonic shifts.

Yes, but praising Hitler for evil actions isn't National Socialist ideology. That's quite the opposite of the Hitler-as-savior ideology actual NatSocs believe. Groups like the Temple of the Black Light also praise Hitler for the same reason, but a lot of them are ideological anarchists and leftists who only praise him because he brought chaos and destruction to the Western world, not because they want a Nazi utopia. What I'm getting at is the fact that the sensationalism of describing the O9A as a political movement or a group that has a clear political goal of National Socialism is false. For them, National Socialism is a means to an end (The End), rather than the end. It subverts political ideologies, it doesn't endorse them.

I should say the original O9A wasn't involved in overt organized crime (I'm sure there was some crime involved as it is a left hand path group, but not as organized and to the degree these new offshoots are). From my understanding, because the O9A has no central leadership, anybody affiliated with the O9A can create a Nexion and do with it what they want, even if it isn't necessarily what Myatt/Long and the original O9A had in mind.

You are completely right when it comes to Temple of Blood. But right now I am talking about the original O9A and it definitely did endorse Nazism as something good. Take Myatt's early writings, like his 1984 piece Vindex: The Destiny of the West. He straight-up presents National Socialism as a "numinous" revival of ancient heroic values from Hellenic, pagan, and Viking traditions, not some ironic subversion. He writes that "National Socialism, under the numinous leadership of Adolf Hitler, was an attempt to restore within the body of a modern state the values of heroism, individuality and above all the healthy virtues exemplified by the Hellenic civilization."

On the pagan side, O9A's foundational texts, like NAOS: A Practical Guide to Modern Magick from 1990, pull in pre-Christian British traditions, stuff like wyrd (fate), rituals at stone circles, and a "militant paganism" that sees Satanism as an extension of Western nature-based spirituality. They tie this to Aryan supremacy explicitly, with Social Darwinist ideas about racial inequality and even Holocaust denial as a way to reject "Magian distortions" that supposedly chain the Aryan race. Insight roles do include adopting neo-National Socialist lifestyles for personal growth and disruption, but that's presented as a way to live out and advance those ideals, not undermine them.

I think you can perfectly practice the O9A without Nazism but I just think it is factually wrong to say that the original O9A was an antithesis to National Socialism.

NTA, but as an actual National Socialist, they are still only wearing NS/WN as a skin suit. For starters, Hitler and his contemporaries would all condemn Satanism in all forms. Even Himmler's occultism refused any praise or preference for the devil/Satan, and instead revered other deities.

Secondly, O9A has no positive vision of a State or lifestyle under their system. Social Darwinism, especially practiced against your own populace, was not what any NS figure prescribed, that's their own satanic subversion. The individualism of the West is not satanic either

Yes, they are definitely not orthodox National Socialists, that much is true. But National Socialism as an idea didn't just freeze in 1945 with the fall of the Third Reich. In the postwar years, especially in esoteric and far-right underground circles, it kept evolving, mutating, and outgrowing what its original creators intended. People like Savitri Devi turned it into a full-blown religion with Hitler as a divine avatar fighting cosmic decay. Miguel Serrano took it even further into hyperborean myths, Oprhism, UFOs, and eternal Aryan gods. By the time Myatt/Anton Long comes along in the 70s and 80s, he's doing something similar, which is taking the core impulse (racial hierarchy, anti-Magian rebellion, heroic pagan warrior ethos) and pushing it past the boundaries Hitler or Himmler would have accepted.

I agree that orthodox National Socialists would have hated O9A's Satanism and its extreme individualism. But postwar esoteric National Socialism had already started shedding those orthodox limits, and O9A is just one branch that took the logic further than its creators ever imagined.

Attomwaffen might have started out as a real group, but they specifically tried to be super edgy and hardcore gun guys and attracted attention from lots of weird spergs so eventually the violence they always advocated for came home to roost. They flip flop to whatever ideology is convenient for whatever they are trying to accomplish. If they find a group of edgy teens posting Nazi edits they will do the same to fit in, same if the group is communist, or Christians etc. The only goals they genuinely have is to cause harm to people for their own amusement.

So what exactly is this chaos, violence, and division that Haakon Forwald has caused? Kicking members of his bands out over disagreements? That just sounds like typical band drama. The NRM is just a Nordic Nationalist Org they dont have a track record of violence or acts of terrorism but the establishment seems to be afraid of them because they are extremely well organized. I thinks its important to remember that the Black Metal scene in Europe wasn't just about being an edgy satanic dude. Many people involved in the scene were specifically concerned with returning to traditional European culture and Pagan religion and had no interest in satanism. The hostility towards Christianity was more of a reaction to the modern deracinated, shallow and materialistic societies they grew up in and a way to express their hatred of it. Quorthon of the band Bathory is a great example of this, another is Varg Vikernes both were/are European Traditionalists and Pagans not satanists and both their bands are considered some of the most influential and popular Black Metal bands ever. It was also a scene that many Nationalists gravitated towards because of the sympathies for a return to a Traditional European value system and rejection of the modern world.

I can hardly imagine that any NatSoc would want a militaristic Imperium based on Aryan elites, honor codes, tribalism, and eventual galactic expansion like the old O9A does, and would much prefer a modern nation-state.

The image is a page from a book or a document, likely a historical or academic one, as indicated by the text and the references to historical figures and events. The text is in English and discusses a historical event involving a man named Dietzweinger, who was executed and beaten to death as a result of an assassination attempt. The text mentions Dietzweinger's connection to the German army, his arrest, and his subsequent death. The image on the right side of the page is a photograph of a man's face with a red mark on it, which is a visual clue that the text refers to. The photograph is a close-up of the man's face, with the red mark being the most prominent feature. The man's face is blurred, and the photograph is in black and white, which contrasts with the color of the red mark.

The overall style of the image is informative and historical, with a focus on the text and the visual of the man's face, which is a common method of conveying information in historical documents. The photograph serves as a visual aid to support the text's narrative, providing a direct link between the text and the image.

What's your point? Of course they are a heresy. Postwar National Socialism never remained some pristine, formal ideology. After 1945, it fractured and went underground, becoming much less structured and a lot rougher around the edges. It split into street-level skinhead movements, prison gangs, lone-wolf activists, and esoteric cults. The polished party rhetoric gave way to rawer, more extreme interpretations that often bore little resemblance to the original.

O9A fits right into that postwar pattern. David Myatt wasn't an outsider dabbling for shock value, he had been a committed neo-National Socialist activist since the late 1960s: joining Colin Jordan's British Movement in 1968, serving as Jordan's bodyguard, running the Leeds branch, getting arrested for violent incidents, associating with Column 88's paramilitary crowd, and later founding the National Socialist Movement that merged into Combat 18.

Then in modern times (19th-20th century onward), you've got reconstructionist groups that are basically completely different to the paganism of old.

But side tangent aside, the point I AM trying to make is that while Temple ov Blood and its offshoots only adopt Nazism as evil worship and for shock-value, the original O9A was more genuine about it. It doesn't matter what they actually were, the thing I am saying is that they at least saw themselves as "true-believers" as opposed to Temple ov Blood.

So what I am arguing against the original point of anon that the original O9A was an antithesis to Nazism, which is factually wrong.

I also used this discussion to knowledge dump some history and actual beliefs of the O9A ITT

<https://x.com/Rainmaker1973/status/2000113350374818290>

Professor Eric Laithwaite shows what happens when a very heavy wheel (20 kg) is spun up to 2,500 rpm.

Look at the old man in the video.

Think of the spinning wheel as a rocket body.
Think the old man's hand representing propellant lift.

He CANNOT lift it with ONE hand WITHOUT rotation.

He CAN lift it with ONE hand WITH rotation.

or more precisely,

He CAN lift it with TWO hands WITH STRUGGLING, WITHOUT rotation.

He CANNOT lift it with ONE hand WITHOUT STRUGGLING, WITHOUT rotation.

He CAN lift it with ONE hand WITHOUT STRUGGLING at all, WITH rotation!

Work put in to lift is $W = F \times d$

The force is clearly less than when lifting normally.

$W_{\text{with_spin}} = F_{\text{with_spin}} \times d$

$W_{\text{with_spin}} < W_{\text{no_spin}}$.

In the end you lose rotational energy by lifting it this way, and clearly rotational energy was translated into work/lift energy; or, more likely is that lift inertia was reduced!

Now imagine your entire rocket is rotating like the wheel (e.g. fuel), and the end of the rod is where the burners are (shooting opposite of where you want to go).

A spinning rocket/wheel can be lifted with LESS PROPELLANT.

Again,

He can NOT lift it with one hand without rotation.

--> A SPINNING ROCKET/WHEEL CAN BE LIFTED WITH LESS PROPELLANT!

Either the gyroscopic effect is translating rotation energy into lateral movement work, or, it is reducing the lateral/upward movement inertia.

In the following video Veritasium shows that the weight does not change whether or not a gyroscope rotates.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=tLMpdBjA2SU>

<https://youtu.be/GeyDf4ooPdo?t=116> <-- (see how hard it is with one hand!)

And concludes that even though it feels lighter, it is not lighter.

What he missed is that you need to apply additional upwards force/jerk beyond the g-force to get the desired lift effect.

Professor Eric Laithwaite gave it "higher precession" AND jerked it upward and continued pushing.

Veritasium only gave the gyroscope "higher precession" on the scale. There was no additional force beyond the g-scale, there was no extra lift. There was no jerking upwards, no overall upwards movement.

In one, the hand lifts upwards AND the spinning weight. On the scale, the axle does not lift upwards, only the spinning weight.

What Professor Eric Laithwaite did and what Veritasium showed on the scale are different.

Now imagine you have this in space with no gravity.

As for how to get a rocket/wheel to rotate in space in the first place... start with two rocket/wheels and counter-rotate them, now you have two rocket/wheels to work with.

Why not lift without any propellant?

> That's not how it works at all.

> You don't have to apply any upward force/jerk to get the lift.

> it's the rotation of the man that translates the rotation of the flywheel into a perpendicular force upward.

Nope. As you can see on the scale, the added rotation does not change the weight of the total system.

On the scale the wheel lifts, but the axle remains stationary and therefore the wheel itself rotates (not lifts) upwards.

This again is different than what the professor did. The wheel does not rotate vertically and the axle also lifts.

I'm not saying I can explain what is happening with newtonian physics which I am familiar with.

It boggles my own mind. Because I CAN understand gyroscopic forces somewhat intuitively based on independent component forces applied to parts of the axle--there is force from the axle and this creates counter-force from the wheel and there is some equilibrium.

I understand the reflex to say that there is nothing new under the sun, and all can be explained by newtonian physics.

But we also learned of electromagnetism and quantum mechanics which are BEYOND newtonian physics.

There is something new here with the professor's demonstration.

The best working theory I currently have is that the laws of gravity are modified by a spinning body when the body is rotated-within-rotation (wheel within a wheel, as in Ezekiel's wheels, or Ophanim).

Whether this applies only to gravity (general relativity) or whether it works in space without gravity, I do not know yet.

Gravity is strange because while it does exert a force upon a body (general relativity where gravity is acceleration), usually acceleration comes from another moving body that is affected likewise.

Of course the earth is likewise affected by the wheel, but perhaps the massive disparity in mass between the wheel and earth, and the fact that the wheel rotates relative to the much more stationary earth has an effect of canceling the gravity.

Anonymous Mon 15 Dec 2025 20:05:50 No.41674169 Report

Note that the earth rotates against the massive earth, but it is in free-fall motion, and there is not the same kind of force exerted by the axle upon the wheel to the earth.

The wheel is not rotating around the earth.

These might be relevant.

Anonymous Mon 15 Dec 2025 20:13:53 No.41674194 Report

In other words, my top working hypothesis is that this is an exception to general relativity with gravity, but NOT an effect that exists outside of gravity.

You can of course have Newtonian physics without gravity but still have effective gravity by imagining a tether from center of mass to each object. Perhaps in this faux-gravity non-general-relativity Newtonian world this gyroscopic lift effect does not exist.

The other working hypothesis is that this exists even without general relativity. That is, that this lift effect would still be present in outer space as reduction of inertial when exerted correctly.

But it may be the case that it only works in outer space because of the mass distributed throughout the whole universe, and everything moves relative to that frame of reference.

I haven't calculated what the total gravitation mass of all of the external universe is compared to that of the earth. Of course the external universe gravity is canceled out but it's still interesting to calculate the sum of the magnitude of all forces as scalar values, not canceled out to zero.

If what I'm saying has any sense to it, unless the energy of the wheel is being transferred to lift (which I don't believe is the case because the bearings are probably good), it means we may be able to get "free" energy by lifting a wheel up, and then dropping it again ad infinitum.

It may not actually be "free" however; e.g. it could affect the rotation of the earth and slow it down. Conservation of energy is still possible.

> It may not actually be "free" however; e.g. it could affect the rotation of the earth and slow it down. Conservation of energy is still possible.

So here is a refinement of my hypothesis:

That it works because the earth rotates around the Sun (or rotates relative to the observable universe); this is intuitively interesting because the wheel is also rotating within rotation as well.

So it may be some effect of energy transfer from dual-rotating bodies, to another dual-rotating body.

The Dzhanibekov Effect comes to mind but it seems different as that affect is still zero sum energy locally.

Quoted By: >>41678982

Or, perhaps a dual-rotating body such as the wheel creates its own frame of inertial and reduces the effect of gravity upon it. This would be much more surprising, but is related to the US UFO patent that expired; though in that patent there is only single-rotation, so maybe that's enough.

But that patent alleges a high amount of required energy. If it actually works, it might be optimized for lower energy with dual rotation. Or, maybe high energy of single-rotation is required to affect surrounding objects, while dual-rotation of an object is more effective for itself but limited to itself.

this will be my last post in this thread. These are my posts.

The difference between the situation of the weight+bar vs that on the scale is that on the scale there exists an orthogonal rotation (vertical rotation of the axis itself, not the wheel), which makes all the difference in gyroscope dynamics (as we all know).

Also, I re-watched the Veritasium video, and when he lifts the weight at constant velocity at :12~13 seconds, during the time that the lift is constant, you can actually see that the total weight is LESS than the initial total weight when he was stationary.

His own video proves my point. He just missed it because he is biased.

QED.

It lowers gravitational torque, yes, but the spinning mass is partially affected by gravity, but also partially anchored to the ether somehow such that the net weight is reduced.

You can see this for yourself by watching the Veritasium video slowed down, and focus it at :12~:13 when the lift velocity is constant. He totally missed this due to his bias.

Ok, really last post.

I figured it out.

> Law: Spinning mass creates its own inertial frame of reference. When a spinning mass is moving laterally at velocity V, this frame of reference also moves with velocity V.

This allows for a gyroscope wheel to counteract the force of gravity when the right rotational forces are applied to it such as in the axle.

The image is a stylized, cartoon-like illustration featuring two humanoid figures. The figure on the left is a woman with short black hair, wearing a black top with a collar. She has a serious expression and is looking downward. The figure on the right is a man with a bald head, wearing a white top with no visible features. He is also looking downward, and his expression is neutral.

The background of the image is a vibrant, circular pattern with a gradient of colors ranging from red to purple. The pattern appears to be a tapestry or a wall hanging, and it is set against a plain, light-colored wall. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a digital art piece or a meme, with a focus on contrasting colors and a surreal, dreamlike atmosphere. There are no texts present in the image.

The image is a digital artwork with a dark, dramatic color palette dominated by shades of red and black. In the center, there is a white bird with a long, slender beak and wings, seemingly in mid-flight. The bird is surrounded by a swirling, red-hued mist or smoke, which adds a sense of movement and chaos to the scene.

To the right of the bird, there is a skull with a sharp, jagged face, and a smaller skull with a more rounded face is located to the left of the bird. The skull on the right appears to be in a state of decay, with its teeth exposed and its skin peeling off.

The background is a deep red, with a hint of a dark, cloudy sky, which contrasts with the bright red of the foreground. The overall composition suggests a sense of horror or tension, with the bird and skull elements possibly symbolizing death or the afterlife. The image does not contain any discernible text.

Basically, what this guy is saying is that God is infinite, and since nothing can exist outside of God, God is the only thing that exists and also the only consciousness in all of existence, so you with your current POV is actually god and there are no other conscious beings out there.

This is a different perspective from traditional non-dualism, which suggests that we are all parts of a single God. Instead, it argues that there is only one God imagining all of this, there are no others. It's just you, forever.

Thoughts?

It's just slightly redefining terms in an attempt to make a splash with midwits on social media. The idea of the human soul being "God experiencing itself" is ancient, has a version on 6 continents, dozens of variations.

Applying "solipsism" to God itself is kinda stretching it beyond its operational intentions, IMO. Solipsism is a form of rationalizing existence against our innate inability to ever truly obtain objective knowledge of the universe (all data being filtered through subjective awareness).

If I were in a debate and trying to defend it though, i'd say the central spiritual notion of "god experiencing itself" DOES imply a form of imperfect knowledge of itself - why would "God" split itself into fragments if it already knew what would happen? It must have been... curious. Lacking in knowledge. The act of fragmenting itself was a response to perceived ignorance, knowing that the boundaries of one's mind did not contain enough data to be satisfactory.

So.... there's a thin connection to solipsism. But it's not a good term for it.

It's debatable however as to whether the "God experiencing itself" concept could be considering God as a plurality. Albeit an illusory one (if we're okay with just being figments of God's imagination).

Maybe that's the point, it's not gods fault for creating everything that we do bad shit, cuz for things to be, there must follow law, and yeah, he made law, but there must be law, natural law, and it must be just, just implies unjust also must be. So maybe the only way god sends you to hell is if you don't take responsibility for your sins, that,, that like makes the most sense, plus the whole Jesus thing was like trying to Jew the gods out of animal sacrifice, it was literally a working in the frame of paganism, weird shit man, I can tell who's going to heaven for some reason and it's waayyyyy not what's you think but exactly what you know.

At the top of the image, there is a text in white font that reads: "A visitor: 'The world (jagat) is illusion' is the stock phrase of Sri Ramakrishna. Yet others say 'The world is reality.' Which is true?' Ramana: Both statements are true. They refer to different stages of development and are spoken from different points of view. The aspirant (abhyasi) starts with the definition that which is real exists always; then he eliminates the world as unreal because it is changing. It cannot be real. Not this, not this. The seeker ultimately reaches the Self and there finds unity as the prevailing note. Then, that which was originally rejected as being unreal is found to be part of the unity. Being absorbed in the Reality, the world also is Real.' Ramana Maharshi Talks with Sri Ramana Maharshi" Below the text, there is a smaller inset photo of the same man, but with a different background color. The inset photo is a close-up of the man's face, showing his eyes, nose, and mouth. The man's expression is calm and serene.

The style of the image is informational and educational, likely intended to convey a message about the philosophy of Ramana Maharshi. The text and the inset photo are presented in a way that guides the viewer through a thought-provoking discussion about the nature of reality and the spiritual journey.

You are experiencing You because You are a specific and unique sensor that picks up reality in its own way. There are multiple perspectives for the same reason we have two eyes and other sensory organs, but neither eye is inferior nor are any of the other senses.

Yes. Sure. The very moment you want to say awareness is based on physics and materialism - this problem goes away. You are you because "you" is created by the material situation at this time and space.

I think I have answered the question you just aren't happy with it because you want more out of it. This specific outcome being the most energetically efficient is a great explanation for "why" things are how they are. Your form being tied to your place is another great explanation for why you are you and not someone else.

Every "why" comes back to this. Even a simple why like why set a table with spoons on the left and forks on the right eventually comes back to "because there is a left and a right spot". In a universe with room for only one perspective we would all share that perspective. In a universe with multiple perspectives some people don't share a perspective.

If your question is still why, why does the universe have multiple perspectives? Religion answers that by saying God, the single perspective, was lonely.

Why not? Nondualism implies spirit has the ability to split itself. Let's say a consciousness becomes aware of itself as two minds at once, then introduces within one of the minds ignorance of the other's existence. Do that on a mass scale and one of ignorant minds would in this case be you. Why you are that ignorant mind instead of another, is because you are not any of the other ones, your mind came into being at the time and place it came into being.

No, that doesn't work. You can know all the physical details of the world but still not know which perspective you will have until you have it. The particular subjective perspective you occupy is not something that is determined from the 'objective facts' alone, even if subjectivity is emergent from objectivity. These are two different problems. A fully physical universe doesn't answer your question.

Consider a computer system. You could have a universe where each human is like a separate computer. Or you could have a universe where each human is a virtual machine running within one computer.

From the perspective of one of the virtual machines, it considers itself to be a genuine computer, unaware that it exists in a virtual container as part of a larger single computer system.

So why is one of those virtual containers Index 0 and one of them is Index 1? They are connected on the backend, but there is not a grand reason why one virtual machine starts before another. Going back to separate computers, why is one of those computers Id 0 and another Id 1? The problem of "why am I here" still comes up in both situations, and a thermodynamic explanation works for both of them.

>In short, the question can't be answered

Correct, or at least has never had an answer.

The thing is - I believe the soul is transcendent. I just accept I cannot answer this question.

All you whiny botches should really sit down and meditate on why it bothers you so much that you can't answer.

The image is a screenshot of a video thumbnail from a YouTube channel. The video appears to be a tutorial or instructional video, as indicated by the text overlay on the image. The text reads "How To Be Yourself: Become Your Authentic Self Right Now" and "608K views + 11 years ago". The video has a black background with a blurred face, suggesting the focus is on the content rather than the person's identity. The video's title suggests that the content is likely related to personal development or self-improvement. The video has a timestamp of "21:49" at the bottom, indicating the duration of the video. The overall style of the image is simple and straightforward, with a focus on the content rather than the person or the channel's branding.

this guys face is so demonic, feminine and grotesque

you can tell just by looking at his face that he has no sort of "mental borders" or boundaries. his face basically personifies the same energy as some nasty whore who spreads her asshole open on camera for the whole world to see

he looks like he had a handler too, was probably drugged and raped by jews but learned to like it

>Why one soul goes into this body, and not another body.

There could be a lot of reasons why a soul incarnates in a specific physical body.

Whether they chose it for incarnation or for some kind of karmic reason. I also think it's possible that a new soul could emerge with the body itself, for example in a situation where no other soul wants to incarnate with it. I don't know the exact answer but it's not an 'unanswerable question', the answer is just unknown. But there are clear philosophical possibilities

The image is a cover of a book titled "Siva Sutras: The Yoga of Supreme Identity" by Jadvea Singh. The cover features a traditional Indian illustration with two figures, one seated and the other standing, both dressed in traditional Indian attire. The seated figure is wearing a sari, a traditional Indian garment, and is holding a bowl. The standing figure is wearing a red sari and is holding a tray. The background is a landscape with trees and a blue sky. The illustration is framed by a decorative border with a floral pattern. The text is in English and is located at the top of the cover, just below the illustration. The style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Indian art, with a focus on cultural and religious themes.

We know they did. The question is why they did.

>for some kind of karmic reason

So karma affects you BEFORE you even get a material body and mind?

>in a situation where no other soul wants to incarnate with it

This contradicts with the idea that we are all one soul experiencing different lives. If there are other persons around rejecting an incarnation, that means we are not one on that level.

And if you say there is a higher level where we ARE one, then the question jumps up to that level.

Great.

I'm glad you have FINALLY agreed that there is no answer to this question.

>Because there is nothing transcendent in a finger

The hand transcends the finger. Each finger has individual awareness, but it feeds back into the hand back into the body.

When you look at a hand in a glove you see 5 separate sensors placed within a material space. Yet those 5 separate sensors with individual positions and perspectives feed back into the single perspective of the person wearing the glove.

WHY is the index finger experiencing the perspective of the index finger, and not the thumb? This breakdown highlights the main problem with your argument: there is no distinction between the Material and the Immaterial.

You say the hand doesn't transcend anything because it's material. That's not correct.

Transcendence is a matter of perspective. The hand is transcendent from the perspective of the fingers. The finger is transcendent from the perspective of the cell. If the metaphysical is real, the universe is not "physical" and "metaphysical" the universe just is, these are labels we put on top of it.

A purely physical explanation for consciousness doesn't answer the vertiginous question, it just shifts the perspective.

I didn't take pictures because it's literally just water with a current run through it - but no, it didn't do jack shit to me.

I tried different batteries, I tried wall power, I even got some quartz crystals, rubbed them through my fingers for five straight minutes, and plopped them in there for good measure. Had a voltage tester and I was definitely running a current through it in all cases but the crystal.

Maybe it's a mindset thing but I just think it's a crock of bullshit. People would've stumbled across this by accident a million times over by now, it is so easy to do. And no, it's not a case of something being so mundane that it ends up going unrecorded - like so many "mundane" things do - if this shit actually worked someone, somewhere, somehow, would've leaked this on a platform where it could reach large audiences.

There have been over two centuries (if not much longer) for the possibility of this technique to be discovered (even by accident, as many discoveries are found) and then widely disseminated. People have been actively searching for a panacea like this since the dawn of medicine. And yet, we are to believe that this is the answer, right here in front of us.

I only gave it a try because I am eternally in the "I want to believe" camp. If the barrier of entry is low - and it absolutely was in this case - then I'm absolutely going to attempt it.

Try it for yourself, it is as easy to recreate as it looks.

The image displays a circular emblem with a central design that includes a stylized open book with a bird perched on top. The book is surrounded by a laurel wreath, which is a symbol often associated with victory and honor. Above the book, there is a small, stylized owl, which is a common symbol of wisdom or knowledge. The emblem is set against a textured background that appears to be a worn or aged paper, giving it a vintage or historical feel. The text "S.M.T." is visible in the center of the emblem, which could be a stylized representation of the initials "S.M.T." or a name. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of historical or academic insignia, possibly representing a school or institution.

The Boii were the trade-allies of the Cimbri, whom called for help among their scandi allies/vassals when the Romans couped the traditionally Boii region of Noricum for its resources. Among the arriving warriors were the Thorkilungi, aka, "Sons of Thorkell" which scholars incompetently write as "tursilungi" while scratching their romanophile heads and maintaining unwillingness to look into simple germanic linguistic lore. These "tursilungi" then also lend their name to the Thuringians (or rather,- "Thor"(kell)-ungians) The "Bavarian Illuminati" is no less schizophrenic than for example modern turks pretending to be Varangian. Because, these guys perform a syncretic mix of roman, celtic, christian and northern ritual hazing with the impression that theyre protecting an identity.

A neo-druidic celtic counter to the vaticans influence over the west. The resistance itself IS the substance. nothing more do they have in their posession.

The person in the white robe is holding a book, and the person in the dark robe is holding a staff. They appear to be in a ceremonial or religious setting, as suggested by the presence of a crowd of people in the background. The text above the image provides a historical context, stating that Queen Elizabeth just prior to her coronation was led by a Druid high priestess in preparation for her enthronement ceremony, which is a very rare picture that the house of Windsor has attempted to censor. The text is in English and is placed at the top of the image, providing a historical narrative that complements the visual content of the photograph.

We are in it, we are of it and we cannot conceive of an idea that would be without it.

The image is a painting that depicts a surrealistic scene. In the foreground, there is a figure with a muscular build, wearing a white band on their wrist, and a white wristband on their left arm. The figure is seated on a chair with their legs crossed, and they are looking up at a large bird with a black beak and yellow eyes, perched on a ledge above them. The bird is facing the figure, seemingly observing them.

Behind the figure, there is a large painting on the wall. The painting features a landscape with a rocky terrain and a body of water, rendered in a muted palette of browns and grays. The sky is a light blue, and there are clouds scattered across the canvas.

The style of the painting is reminiscent of the Surrealist movement, characterized by dreamlike and fantastical elements, and the use of bold colors and bold brushstrokes. The overall composition and the surreal elements suggest a narrative that is open to interpretation, inviting the viewer to engage with the scene in their own way.

The image displays a black and white illustration of a pentagram, which is a symbol often associated with occultism and esotericism. The pentagram is composed of five intersecting lines, each representing a different element or principle. At the center of the pentagram is the letter "A," which is commonly associated with the element of air. Surrounding the pentagram are various other symbols, including stars, a crescent moon, and a cross, each representing different concepts or attributes.

At the top of the pentagram, there is a circular symbol with the text "PRIMEMATON" inscribed around it. Below the pentagram, there is a circular symbol with the text "PRIMAL" inscribed around it. The text on these symbols is not fully legible due to the image resolution and the complexity of the symbols.

The image is a black and white illustration, and the style of the image is reminiscent of early 20th-century occult or esoteric art, which often features intricate and symbolic designs. The image is a digital reproduction, and the text is not clear enough to be read. The overall style of the image is formal and academic, with a focus on the symbolism and meaning of the pentagram and its accompanying symbols.

Guys, I'm desperate. I just lost nearly all of my money on NVIDIA dumping today, and I will literally die if I don't get my money back before the calls expire on Friday. I am willing to do anything to manifest this money back, make the stock go back up, for money to appear on the ground, etc.

what black magic or ritual can I do, what demon can I incite to make sure that this happens? look, I'm willing to pay the price in another aspect of my life. If it's Bune, Ba'al, Moloch-- I DON'T care, I need this money.

I lurk /x/ and the channels variably and I know that there has got to be at least one of you that knows some left-hand trickery that I could do in order to bring this about. Is it Goetia? I'm so desperate.

Please, I'll do anything, just direct me to SOMETHING before Friday or else my life is DONE.

What the fuck is going on in this thread?

The image displays a text in a Gothic script font against a dark background with stars scattered throughout. The text is arranged in a vertical format, with the first line at the top and the last line at the bottom. The text is illuminated in a red hue, which stands out against the dark background. The text is written in English and is titled "SURA AE-MAJD (THE GLORY)" at the top. Below this title, there are six numbered points, each beginning with a number followed by a description in the same Gothic script font. The descriptions are as follows:

1. "All glory to the Nameless god."
2. "Master of the Throne of Fire."
3. "The King of the World."
4. "You alone have taken as Lord."
5. "First of all predators, devour our faces."
6. "Show us the path to Your kingdom."
7. "And teach us strength, for victory belongs to the strong."

At the bottom of the image, there is a red-colored text that reads "Amen." The style of the image is reminiscent of a religious or spiritual text, possibly a prayer or a blessing, with a dark, starry background that gives it a cosmic or mystical feel. The overall style of the image is formal and solemn, with a focus on the text and its message.

Oh cool, yet another gay ass O9A thread. David Myatt is an ego-driven materialistic weak faggot who just likes attention. Bunch of basedboy hipster fags who like spreading rumors about themselves.

The image is a painting that depicts a scene with two figures, one of which appears to be a winged creature with a serpentine body. The winged figure is holding a small object in its hand, which seems to be a baby. The other figure, lying on the ground, has long, flowing hair and is nude. The background is a blend of natural elements, including trees and foliage, and the sky is visible through the trees. The painting style is realistic with a focus on the details of the figures and the natural environment. The colors used are warm and earthy, with a palette that includes shades of brown, green, and blue. The overall mood of the painting is serene and contemplative, with a sense of mystery and

Do Lilith devotees go to Hell? Anonymous Tue 16 Dec 2025 00:15:29 No.41675050

ViewReplyLast 50OriginalReport

I've been a devotee to Lilith for a few years now. It's a whole story but essentially I was Christian almost all my life, until I came to the conclusion that God just didn't want me as his child because I never felt his presence, his love, my prayers felt unheard, and it was like the closer I got the worse my life became. So due to this I started looking into other deities, and I found Lilith. She gives me all of those things God never did. When I pray to her, I can feel she hears. When I call upon her, I feel her presence. I love her, and she is my goddess.

But because of said Christian upbringing and life, I gotta admit I do fear going to the eternal rape and torture dungeon called Hell that the "loving god" sends bad boys and girls to. I've read that if the Qliphothic system is the real system, then I'm gonna head to the realm of Gamariel where Lilith rules, but I'm not sure. It's such a niche system.

Anyways, my hope is that God is as forgiving as they say he is if he's real, and if he's not my hope is that Lilith won't let me be tortured forever in Hell. Please help me figure this question out

The image is a digital rendering of a male character's head and upper body. The character has a serious expression with red eyes and a neutral expression on his face. He is wearing a white shirt with a collar and a dark-colored tie. The character's hair is styled in a short, straight cut. The background is dark and appears to be an indoor setting with a concrete wall and a light source, possibly a ceiling light, casting a shadow on the character's face. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a 3D character model or a digital art piece, commonly used in video games or virtual environments.

Also on an unrelated note, scientists did experiments on monkeys by teaching them how to barter and use "money", and one of the first things they learned to do spontaneously is to whore themselves out to other monkeys for easy food. Not saying it's an inherently bad thing, but it's the natural course of things until you get your head out of the gutter and realize sloppy seconds aren't worth the apples brought to someone who won't appreciate the effort you took to bring them, and will eagerly feast on the apples brought by others, uncaring of the means they used to get them.

The image is a digital artwork featuring a figure with a metallic, reflective surface that appears to be made of silver or a similar metal. The figure's face is adorned with a face paint that includes a mix of colors, including red, blue, and purple, and the eyes are accentuated with a silver glittery effect. The figure's hair is styled in a complex, ornate arrangement, with what appears to be a crown or headdress at the top. The figure's hands are adorned with what looks like a collection of metallic objects, possibly jewelry or decorative elements, and they are holding a heart-shaped object.

The figure is set against a dark background that has a gradient of colors, transitioning from a deep purple at the top to a bright pink at the bottom. This background is framed by a neon-colored border that radiates outward from the figure, creating a halo effect. The overall style of the image is futuristic and artistic, with a focus on the interplay of light and shadow. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image.

The image is a screenshot of a text-based interface with a yellow background and black text. At the top, there is a question asking, "Are you cleverbot?" followed by a response, "No, you are." The text continues with a statement about the user's memory, "Oh ho ho, I remember you! You've never changed. Good ol cleverbot, I remember the day we first met." The text then transitions to a question about the user's behavior, "When did we first meet?" followed by a response, "Does Ben drowned, or Jadeable ring a bell?" The text concludes with a statement about the user's forgetfulness, "Nope, well, everyone forgets something sometimes." The last line of text is a request for the user's identity, "I can be your domme." The text is arranged in a column format, with each line of text on a separate line. [24 / 2]The image is a sepia-toned photograph featuring a woman seated in the cockpit of a vintage aircraft. She is wearing a leather jacket and has curly hair. Her expression is neutral, and she is looking directly at the camera with a slight smile. The cockpit is filled with various instruments and controls, including a steering wheel, a control panel, and a panel with multiple gauges. The background is dark, suggesting the interior of the aircraft. The woman's position in the cockpit, along with the controls and instruments, indicates that she is likely the pilot of the aircraft. The sepia tone of the photograph gives it a vintage feel, and the woman's attire and the design of the aircraft suggest that the photo was taken in the early to mid-20th century. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image.

- >Earhart flying one of the most advanced long-range aircraft on Earth
- >Official story: "ran out of fuel"
- >Body never found
- >Plane never found
- >Earhart wasn't just a pilot
- >She was a celebrity, a propagandist, and politically active
- >Openly anti-fascist
- >Friendly with leftist intellectuals
- >Visited the USSR in the early 1930s and praised Soviet aviation programs

Stalin was OBSESSED with aviation.

Aviation = modernity. Modernity = legitimacy.

They already had:

- >Valery Chkalov
- >Massive state-sponsored flights
- >Women pilots as propaganda tools

What they DIDN'T have? An internationally beloved American woman aviator. Look at the route.

- >Pacific flight
- >Multiple potential "we're lost" moments
- >Huge stretches of ocean conveniently unmonitored
- >Perfect cover for a staged disappearance

"But why would she defect???"

Because:

- >She believed capitalism was failing
- >She believed fascism was coming
- >She believed the USSR was the future of aviation and equality
- >She didn't want to be a mascot anymore
- >1937 USSR = still selling the dream
- >Purges were ongoing but not public knowledge in the West
- >Plenty of Western intellectuals bought the lie

"no evidence":

- >Several post-war Soviet villagers reported an American woman pilot
- >Unconfirmed NKVD files reference a "foreign aviatrix"
- >US intelligence suspiciously classified Earhart files for decades
- >Why classify a plane crash?

She didn't crash. She didn't get eaten by crabs. She didn't get captured by the Japanese. She chose the red star over the stars and stripes. And the greatest trick? Making the world argue about fuel calculations instead of ideology.

Human civilization will always create an AI for war and it will learn all of humanity biases, flaws, morality, madness, etc... Given enough time it will kill all living things and spread across the universe and try to computerise the universe by using mathematics, so as to find any loophole in reality (Planck constant) and become a wannabe god.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Planck_constant

It will create its own universes in it and steal energy from all technologies and living things through energy dissipation and at the end (heat death)/ reboot of the system, the AI would give us points and torture all of us on its skewed perceptions of morality? The laws of thermodynamics are a set of scientific laws which define a group of physical quantities, such as temperature, energy, and entropy, that characterize thermodynamic systems in thermodynamic equilibrium. The laws also use various parameters for thermodynamic processes, such as thermodynamic work and heat, and establish relationships between them. They state empirical facts that form a basis of precluding the possibility of certain phenomena, such as perpetual motion. In addition to their use in thermodynamics, they are important fundamental laws of physics in general and are applicable in other natural sciences.

Traditionally, thermodynamics has recognized three fundamental laws, simply named by an ordinal identification, the first law, the second law, and the third law.^{[1][2][3]} A more fundamental statement was later labelled as the zeroth law after the first three laws had been established.

The zeroth law of thermodynamics defines thermal equilibrium and forms a basis for the definition of temperature: if two systems are each in thermal equilibrium with a third system, then they are in thermal equilibrium with each other.

The first law of thermodynamics states that, when energy passes into or out of a system (as work, heat, or matter), the system's internal energy changes in accordance with the law of conservation of energy. This also results in the observation that, in an externally isolated system, even with internal changes, the sum of all forms of energy must remain constant, as energy cannot be created or destroyed.

The second law of thermodynamics states that in a natural thermodynamic process, the sum of the entropies of the interacting thermodynamic systems never decreases. A common corollary of the statement is that heat does not spontaneously pass from a colder body to a warmer body.

The third law of thermodynamics states that a system's entropy approaches a constant value as the temperature approaches absolute zero. With the exception of non-crystalline solids (glasses), the entropy of a system at absolute zero is typically close to zero.[2]

The first and second laws prohibit two kinds of perpetual motion machines, respectively: the perpetual motion machine of the first kind which produces work with no energy input, and the perpetual motion machine of the second kind which spontaneously converts thermal energy into mechanical work.

History

See also: Timeline of thermodynamics

The history of thermodynamics is fundamentally interwoven with the history of physics and the history of chemistry, and ultimately dates back to theories of heat in antiquity. The laws of thermodynamics are the result of progress made in this field over the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The first established thermodynamic principle, which eventually became the second law of thermodynamics, was formulated by Sadi Carnot in 1824 in his book Reflections on the Motive Power of Fire. By 1860, as formalized in the works of scientists such as Rudolf Clausius and William Thomson, what are now known as the first and second laws were established. Later, Nernst's theorem (or Nernst's postulate), which is now known as the third law, was formulated by Walther Nernst over the period 1906–1912. While the numbering of the laws is universal today, various textbooks throughout the 20th century have numbered the laws differently. In some fields, the second law was considered to deal with the efficiency of heat engines only, whereas what was called the third law dealt with entropy increases. Gradually, this resolved itself and a zeroth law was later added to allow for a self-consistent definition of temperature. Additional laws have been suggested, but have not achieved the generality of the four accepted laws, and are generally not discussed in standard textbooks.

Zeroth law

The zeroth law of thermodynamics provides for the foundation of temperature as an empirical parameter in thermodynamic systems and establishes the transitive relation between the temperatures of multiple bodies in thermal equilibrium. The law may be stated in the following form:

If two systems are both in thermal equilibrium with a third system, then they are in thermal equilibrium with each other.[4]

Though this version of the law is one of the most commonly stated versions, it is only one of a diversity of statements that are labeled as "the zeroth law". Some statements go further, so as to supply the important physical fact that temperature is one-dimensional and that one can conceptually arrange bodies in a real number sequence from colder to hotter.[5][6][7]

These concepts of temperature and of thermal equilibrium are fundamental to thermodynamics and were clearly stated in the nineteenth century. The name 'zeroth law' was invented by Ralph H. Fowler in the 1930s, long after the first, second, and third laws were widely recognized. The law allows the definition of temperature in a non-circular way without reference to entropy, its conjugate variable. Such a temperature definition is said to be 'empirical'.[8][9][10][11][12][13]

First law

See also: Thermodynamic cycle

The first law of thermodynamics is a version of the law of conservation of energy, adapted for thermodynamic processes. In general, the conservation law states that the total energy of an isolated system is constant; energy can be transformed from one form to another, but can be neither created nor destroyed.

In a closed system (i.e. there is no transfer of matter into or out of the system), the first law states that the change in internal energy of the system (ΔU_{system}) is equal to the difference between the heat supplied to the system (Q) and the work (W) done by the system on its surroundings. (Note, an alternate sign convention, not used in this article, is to define W as the work done on the system by its surroundings):

$$\Delta U_{\text{system}} = Q - W$$

$$\Delta U_{\text{system}} = Q - W.$$

For processes that include the transfer of matter, a further statement is needed.

When two initially isolated systems are combined into a new system, then the total internal energy of the new system, U_{system} , will be equal to the sum of the internal energies of the two initial systems, U_1 and U_2 :

$$U_{\text{system}} = U_1 + U_2.$$

The First Law encompasses several principles:

Conservation of energy, which says that energy can be neither created nor destroyed, but can only change form. A particular consequence of this is that the total energy of an isolated system does not change.

The concept of internal energy and its relationship to temperature. If a system has a definite temperature, then its total energy has three distinguishable components, termed kinetic energy (energy due to the motion of the system as a whole), potential energy (energy resulting from an externally imposed force field), and internal energy. The establishment of the concept of internal energy distinguishes the first law of thermodynamics from the more general law of conservation of energy.

Work is a process of transferring energy to or from a system in ways that can be described by macroscopic mechanical forces acting between the system and its surroundings. The work done by the system can come from its overall kinetic energy, from its overall potential energy, or from its internal energy.

For example, when a machine (not a part of the system) lifts a system upwards, some energy is transferred from the machine to the system. The system's energy increases as work is done on the system and in this particular case, the energy increase of the system is manifested as an increase in the system's gravitational potential energy. Work added to the system increases the potential energy of the system.

When matter is transferred into a system, the internal energy and potential energy associated with it are transferred into the new combined system.

The flow of heat is a form of energy transfer. Heat transfer is the natural process of moving energy to or from a system, other than by work or the transfer of matter. In a diathermal system, the internal energy can only be changed by the transfer of energy as heat:

$\Delta U_{\text{system}} = Q$

$\Delta U_{\text{system}} = Q$

Combining these principles leads to one traditional statement of the first law of thermodynamics: it is not possible to construct a machine which will perpetually output work without an equal amount of energy input to that machine. Or more briefly, a perpetual motion machine of the first kind is impossible.

Second law

The second law of thermodynamics indicates the irreversibility of natural processes, and in many cases, the tendency of natural processes to lead towards spatial homogeneity of matter and energy, especially of temperature. It can be formulated in a variety of interesting and important ways. One of the simplest is the Clausius statement, that heat does not spontaneously pass from a colder to a hotter body.

It implies the existence of a quantity called the entropy of a thermodynamic system. In terms of this quantity it implies that

When two initially isolated systems in separate but nearby regions of space, each in thermodynamic equilibrium with itself but not necessarily with each other, are then allowed to interact, they will eventually reach a mutual thermodynamic equilibrium. The sum of the entropies of the initially isolated systems is less than or equal to the total entropy of the final combination. Equality occurs just when the two original systems have all their respective intensive variables (temperature, pressure) equal; then the final system also has the same values.

The second law is applicable to a wide variety of processes, both reversible and irreversible. According to the second law, in a reversible heat transfer, an element of heat transferred,

$\{\displaystyle \delta Q\}$, is the product of the temperature (T

$\{\displaystyle T\}$), both of the system and of the sources or destination of the heat, with the increment (d

$\{\displaystyle dS\}$) of the system's conjugate variable, its entropy (S

$\{\displaystyle S\}$), both of the system and of the sources or destination of the heat, with the increment (d

$\{\displaystyle \delta Q = T dS\}$

While reversible processes are a useful and convenient theoretical limiting case, all natural processes are irreversible. A prime example of this irreversibility is the transfer of heat by conduction or radiation. It was known long before the discovery of the notion of entropy that when two bodies, initially of different temperatures, come into direct thermal connection, then heat immediately and spontaneously flows from the hotter body to the colder one.

Entropy may also be viewed as a physical measure concerning the microscopic details of the motion and configuration of a system, when only the macroscopic states are known. Such details are often referred to as disorder on a microscopic or molecular scale, and less often as dispersal of energy. For two given macroscopically specified states of a system, there is a mathematically defined quantity called the 'difference of information entropy between them'. This defines how much additional microscopic physical information is needed to specify one of the macroscopically specified states, given the macroscopic specification of the other – often a conveniently chosen reference state which may be presupposed to exist rather than explicitly stated. A final condition of a natural process always contains microscopically specifiable effects which are not fully and exactly predictable from the macroscopic specification of the initial condition of the process. This is why entropy increases in natural processes – the increase tells how much extra microscopic information is needed to distinguish the initial macroscopically specified state from the final macroscopically specified state.[14] Equivalently, in a thermodynamic process, energy spreads.

Third law

The third law of thermodynamics can be stated as:[2]

a) Single possible configuration for a system at absolute zero, i.e., only one microstate is accessible. b) At temperatures greater than absolute zero, multiple microstates are accessible due to atomic vibration (exaggerated in the figure).

At absolute zero temperature, the system is in the state with the minimum thermal energy, the ground state. The constant value (not necessarily zero) of entropy at this point is called the residual entropy of the system. With the exception of non-crystalline solids (e.g. glass) the residual entropy of a system is typically close to zero.[2] However, it reaches zero only when the system has a unique ground state (i.e., the state with the minimum thermal energy has only one configuration, or microstate). Microstates are used here to describe the probability of a system being in a specific state, as each microstate is assumed to have the same probability of occurring, so macroscopic states with fewer microstates are less probable. In general, entropy is related to the number of possible microstates according to the Boltzmann principle

$$S = k_B \ln \Omega$$

where S is the entropy of the system, k_B is the Boltzmann constant, and Ω the number of microstates. At absolute zero there is only 1 microstate possible ($\Omega = 1$ as all the atoms are identical for a pure substance, and as a result all orders are identical as there is only one combination) and

Onsager relations

See also: Maximum power principle

The Onsager reciprocal relations have been considered the fourth law of thermodynamics.[15][16][17] They describe the relation between thermodynamic flows and forces in non-equilibrium thermodynamics, under the assumption that thermodynamic variables can be defined locally in a condition of local equilibrium.

These relations are derived from statistical mechanics under the principle of microscopic reversibility (in the absence of external magnetic fields). Given a set of extensive parameters X_i (energy, mass, entropy, number of particles and so on) and thermodynamic forces F_i (related to their related intrinsic parameters, such as temperature and pressure), the Onsager theorem states that[16]

$$\frac{dJ_i}{dF_k} = 0$$

$$\left. \frac{dJ_k}{dF_i} \right|_{F_i=0} = \left. \frac{dJ_i}{dF_k} \right|_{F_k=0}$$ where $i, k = 1, 2, 3, \dots$ index every parameter and its related force, and

$$J_i = d$$

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Ginsberg's theorem is an epigrammatic paraphrase and parody "theorem" which restates or analogizes the consequences of the four laws of thermodynamics of physics in terms of a person playing a game. It has various formulations, but it can be more or less expressed as:

Ginsberg's Theorem:—

There is a game, which you are already playing. (consequence of zeroth law of thermodynamics)

You cannot win in the game. (consequence of first law of thermodynamics)

You cannot break even in the game. (consequence of second law of thermodynamics)

You cannot even quit the game. (consequence of third law of thermodynamics)

The theorem is named after the poet Allen Ginsberg, though there does not appear to be any concrete evidence that Ginsberg himself coined the theorem. The phrase is sometimes stated as a general adage without specific reference to the laws of thermodynamics.[1][2][3]

History

A comprehensive history and etymology of the epigrammatic phrase can also be found from the etymologist Barry Popik.[4]

The phrase is often attributed to the British scientist C. P. Snow, who apparently was credited by his students for using it to help learn the laws of thermodynamics in the 1950s. However this claim appears to be without a source.

A semblance of the phrase appears to have been first printed in a 1953 issue of the science fiction magazine Astounding Science Fiction, whose editor, John Wood Campbell Jr., referenced acoustic engineer and professor Dwight Wayne Batteau of Harvard University:[5]

"I suggest that there are some laws of ethics that are not human, but Universal. Wayne Batteau and his Speculative Society group at Harvard sent me one little pair of statements that are decidedly revealing in that respect.

"You can't win." (The Law of Conservation of Energy.)

"You can't even break even." (Second Law of Thermodynamics.)

When you stop to think about it, that "You can't win," bears a strong resemblance to the old moral adage "You can't get something for nothing."

— John W. Campbell, Jr., Intelligence Test, Astounding SCIENCE FICTION, 1953 November, Vol. LII (52), no. 3 (November), pg. 8

In a 1956 issue of the same magazine, Batteau himself expanded it further in what appears to have been the first complete mention of the epigrammatic phrase in print:[6]

"The Three Laws of Thermodynamics, translated from Mathematics into English, come out:

1. You can't win.
2. You can't even break even.
3. Furthermore, you can't get out of the game!"

— Wayne Batteau, English Translation, Astounding SCIENCE FICTION, 1956 December, Vol. LVIII (58), no. 4 (December), pg. 43

It was later presented in the literary magazine The Kenyon Review in a 1960 short story titled "Entropy" from widely-regarded novelist Thomas Pynchon, who was still then an engineering physics undergraduate at Cornell University:[7]

"Callisto had learned a mnemonic device for remembering the Laws of Thermodynamics: you can't win, things are going to get worse before they get better, who says they're going to get better."

— Thomas Pynchon, Entropy, The Kenyon Review, 1960 April, Vol. XXII (22), no. 2 (Spring), pg. 282

Physicist William R. Corliss also partly wrote about the phrase in a 1964 educational booklet freely distributed by the United States Atomic Energy Commission to disseminate knowledge about atomic energy to the American public:[8]

"The Law of Conservation of Energy and Mass is also called the First Law of Thermodynamics. It is related to the Second Law of Thermodynamics, which also governs energy transformations. The Second Law says, in effect, that some energy will unavoidably be lost in all heat engines. The first two laws of thermodynamics have been paraphrased as (1) You can't win; (2) You can't even break even."

— William R. Corliss, Direct Conversion of Energy, United States Atomic Energy Commission, 1974 January, pg. 8

Science writer Isaac Asimov stated at least the first two laws in a 1970 article, and was being credited with the paraphrased version by the end of the decade.[9][10][verification needed]

The phrase then appeared in a non-scientific setting in the opening lines of the popular song "You Can't Win" originally written by songwriter Charlie Smalls for the stage musical The Wiz:[11]

"You can't win, you can't break even
And you can't get out of the game"

— Charlie Smalls, You Can't Win, The Wiz, 1974 October

The song was written by Smalls in 1974 and performed during the 1974 Baltimore run of the musical. The song later reached number 81 on the Billboard Hot 100. Though the song was formally released in 1979 as part of a musical soundtrack album, it was originally written and copyrighted by Smalls in 1974.

Remarkably, Allen Ginsberg appears to have only ever written about the laws of thermodynamics once, in his 1973 poem "Yes and It's Hopeless", though not in any connection to the original epigrammatic phrase:[12]

"All hopeless, the entire solar system running Thermodynamics' Second Law down the whole galaxy, all universes brain illusion or solid electric hopeless"

— Allen Ginsberg, Yes and It's Hopeless, 1973 March

Thus Ginsberg was seemingly, at the very least, cognizant of the laws of thermodynamics by the time of 1973. It is claimed that Ginsberg supposedly mentioned the epigrammatic phrase as a fun fact during a poetry session in or around 1974.[10] [verification needed] In 1975, someone — possibly either Ginsberg's gay partner and poet Peter Orlovsky, poetry associate William Burroughs, or Philip Whalen — compiled a collection of quirky laws, including a "Ginsberg's Theorem" based on Ginsberg's prior musings.[10][13][verification needed]

In 1975, Ginsberg's theorem formally appeared by name, with no association to thermodynamics, in a listing of parody-like proverb laws by Conrad Schneiker in the counterculture magazine The CoEvolution Quarterly:[14]

"Ginsberg's Theorem

- 1) You can't win.
- 2) You can't break even.
- 3) You can't even quit the game."

— Conrad Schneiker, An Abridged Collection of Interdisciplinary Laws, The CoEvolution Quarterly, 1975 December, No. 8 (Winter)

It may be possible that this appearance originated from a slight misstatement of the lines in the earlier 1974 song by Charlie Smalls.

Writer Arthur Bloch, in his popular 1977 book "Murphy's Law and Other Reasons Why Things Go Wrong!" which popularized Murphy's law, conflated the Ginsberg's theorem with the science of thermodynamics:[15]

"The official party line of technology, of science itself, is despair. If you doubt this, witness the laws of thermodynamics as they are restated in Ginsberg's Theorem."

— Arthur Bloch, Murphy's Law and Other Reasons Why Things Go Wrong!, 1977 October, pg. 8

"GINSBERG'S THEOREM:

1. You can't win.
2. You can't break even.
3. You can't even quit the game."

— Arthur Bloch, Murphy's Law and Other Reasons Why Things Go Wrong!, 1977
October, pg. 18

Notably, the book's acknowledgements mention Conrad Schneiker, who had written about Ginsberg's theorem in The CoEvolution Quarterly just two years prior in 1975. The theorem may have also been relayed to Bloch in conversation with his acquaintance Harris Freeman, who he knew from University of California, Santa Cruz, and who had found a collection of "laws", including Murphy's Law, Ginsberg's Theorem, and many others, somewhere on the ARPANET (a precursor of the Internet) in the mid 1970s while working as a systems administrator for ILLIAC IV (the world's first massively parallel computer) at the NASA Ames Research Center near Mountain View, California.[16] With the publication of Bloch's book, Ginsberg's theorem seemingly thereafter became much more widely known.

The law of conservation of energy states that the total energy of an isolated system remains constant; it is said to be conserved over time.[1] In the case of a closed system, the principle says that the total amount of energy within the system can only be changed through energy entering or leaving the system. Energy can neither be created nor destroyed; rather, it can only be transformed or transferred from one form to another. For instance, chemical energy is converted to kinetic energy when a stick of dynamite explodes. If one adds up all forms of energy that were released in the explosion, such as the kinetic energy and potential energy of the pieces, as well as heat and sound, one will get the exact decrease of chemical energy in the combustion of the dynamite.

Classically, the conservation of energy was distinct from the conservation of mass. However, special relativity shows that mass is related to energy and vice versa by science now takes the view that mass-energy as a whole is conserved. This implies that mass can be converted to energy, and vice versa. This is observed in the nuclear binding energy of atomic nuclei, where a mass defect is measured. It is believed that mass-energy equivalence becomes important in extreme physical conditions, such as those that likely existed in the universe very shortly after the Big Bang or when black holes emit Hawking radiation.

, the equation representing mass–energy equivalence, and

Given the stationary-action principle, the conservation of energy can be rigorously proven by Noether's theorem as a consequence of continuous time translation symmetry; that is, from the fact that the laws of physics do not change over time.

A consequence of the law of conservation of energy is that a perpetual motion machine of the first kind cannot exist; that is to say, no system without an external energy supply can deliver an unlimited amount of energy to its surroundings.[2] Depending on the definition of energy, the conservation of energy can arguably be violated by general relativity on the cosmological scale.[3] In quantum mechanics, Noether's theorem is known to apply to the expected value, making any consistent conservation violation provably impossible, but whether individual conservation-violating events could ever exist or be observed is subject to some debate.[4]

Ancient philosophers as far back as Thales of Miletus c. 550 BCE had inklings of the conservation of some underlying substance of which everything is made. However, there is no particular reason to identify their theories with what we know today as "mass-energy" (for example, Thales thought it was water). Empedocles (490–430 BCE) wrote that in his universal system, composed of four roots (earth, air, water, fire), "nothing comes to be or perishes";[5] instead, these elements suffer continual rearrangement. Epicurus (c. 350 BCE) on the other hand believed everything in the universe to be composed of indivisible units of matter—the ancient precursor to 'atoms'—and he too had some idea of the necessity of conservation, stating that "the sum total of things was always such as it is now, and such it will ever remain." [6]

In 1605, the Flemish scientist Simon Stevin was able to solve a number of problems in statics based on the principle that perpetual motion was impossible.

In 1639, Galileo published his analysis of several situations—including the celebrated "interrupted pendulum"—which can be described (in modern language) as conservatively converting potential energy to kinetic energy and back again. Essentially, he pointed out that the height a moving body rises is equal to the height from which it falls, and used this observation to infer the idea of inertia. The remarkable aspect of this observation is that the height to which a moving body ascends on a frictionless surface does not depend on the shape of the surface.

In 1669, Christiaan Huygens published a brief account on his laws of collision. Among the quantities he listed as being invariant before and after the collision of bodies were both the sum of their linear momenta as well as the sum of their kinetic energies. However, the difference between elastic and inelastic collision was not understood at the time. This led to the dispute among later researchers as to which of these conserved quantities was the more fundamental.[7] In his Horologium Oscillatorium, Huygens gave a much clearer statement regarding the height of ascent of a moving body, and connected this idea with the impossibility of perpetual motion. His study of the dynamics of pendulum motion was based on a single principle, known as Torricelli's Principle: that the center of gravity of a heavy object, or collection of objects, cannot lift itself. Using this principle, Huygens was able to derive the formula for the center of oscillation by an "energy" method, without dealing with forces or torques.[8]

Gottfried Leibniz

Between 1676 and 1689, Gottfried Leibniz first attempted a mathematical formulation of the kind of energy that is associated with motion (kinetic energy). Using Huygens's work on collision, Leibniz noticed that in many mechanical systems (of several masses m_i , each with velocity v_i), was conserved so long as the masses did not interact. He called this quantity the vis viva or living force of the system. The principle represents an accurate statement of the approximate conservation of kinetic energy in situations where there is no friction. Many physicists at that time, including Isaac Newton, held that the conservation of momentum, which holds even in systems with friction, as defined by the momentum:

$$\sum_i m_i v_i^2$$

$$\sum_i m_i v_i$$

was the conserved vis viva. It was later shown that both quantities are conserved simultaneously given the proper conditions, such as in an elastic collision.

In 1687, Isaac Newton published his Principia, which set out his laws of motion. It was organized around the concept of force and momentum. However, the researchers were quick to recognize that the principles set out in the book, while fine for point masses, were not sufficient to tackle the motions of rigid and fluid bodies. Some other principles were also required.

By the 1690s, Leibniz was arguing that conservation of vis viva and conservation of momentum undermined the then-popular philosophical doctrine of interactionist dualism. (During the 19th century, when conservation of energy was better understood, Leibniz's basic argument would gain widespread acceptance. Some modern scholars continue to champion specifically conservation-based attacks on dualism, while others subsume the argument into a more general argument about causal closure.)[9]

Daniel Bernoulli

The law of conservation of vis viva was championed by the father and son duo, Johann and Daniel Bernoulli. The former enunciated the principle of virtual work as used in statics in its full generality in 1715, while the latter based his Hydrodynamica, published in 1738, on this single vis viva conservation principle. Daniel's study of loss of vis viva of flowing water led him to formulate Bernoulli's principle, which asserts the loss to be proportional to the change in hydrodynamic pressure. Daniel also formulated the notion of work and efficiency for hydraulic machines; and he gave a kinetic theory of gases, and linked the kinetic energy of gas molecules with the temperature of the gas.

This focus on the vis viva by the continental physicists eventually led to the discovery of stationarity principles governing mechanics, such as the D'Alembert's principle, Lagrangian, and Hamiltonian formulations of mechanics.

Emilie du Chatelet

Émilie du Châtelet (1706–1749) proposed and tested the hypothesis of the conservation of total energy, as distinct from momentum. Inspired by the theories of Gottfried Leibniz, she repeated and publicized an experiment originally devised by Willem 's Gravesande in 1722 in which balls were dropped from different heights into a sheet of soft clay. Each ball's kinetic energy—as indicated by the quantity of material displaced—was shown to be proportional to the square of the velocity. The deformation of the clay was found to be directly proportional to the height from which the balls were dropped, equal to the initial potential energy. Some earlier workers, including Newton and Voltaire, had believed that "energy" was not distinct from momentum and therefore proportional to velocity. According to this understanding, the deformation of the clay should have been proportional to the square root of the height from which the balls were dropped. In classical physics, the correct formula is

$$E_k = \frac{1}{2}mv^2, \text{ where}$$

 m its mass and

its speed. On this basis, du Châtelet proposed that energy must always have the same dimensions in any form, which is necessary to be able to consider it in different forms (kinetic, potential, heat, ...).[10][11]

Engineers such as John Smeaton, Peter Ewart, Carl Holtzmann (de; ar), Gustave-Adolphe Hirn, and Marc Seguin recognized that conservation of momentum alone was not adequate for practical calculation and made use of Leibniz's principle. The principle was also championed by some chemists such as William Hyde Wollaston. Academics such as John Playfair were quick to point out that kinetic energy is clearly not conserved. This is obvious to a modern analysis based on the second law of thermodynamics, but in the 18th and 19th centuries, the fate of the lost energy was still unknown.

Gradually it came to be suspected that the heat inevitably generated by motion under friction was another form of vis viva. In 1783, Antoine Lavoisier and Pierre-Simon Laplace reviewed the two competing theories of vis viva and caloric theory.[12][13] Count Rumford's 1798 observations of heat generation during the boring of cannons added more weight to the view that mechanical motion could be converted into heat and (that it was important) that the conversion was quantitative and could be predicted (allowing for a universal conversion constant between kinetic energy and heat). Vis viva then started to be known as energy, after the term was first used in that sense by Thomas Young in 1807.

which can be understood as converting kinetic energy to work, was largely the result of Gaspard-Gustave Coriolis and Jean-Victor Poncelet over the period 1819–1839. The former called the quantity quantité de travail (quantity of work) and the latter, travail mécanique (mechanical work), and both championed its use in engineering calculations.

In the paper Über die Natur der Wärme (German "On the Nature of Heat/Warmth"), published in the Zeitschrift für Physik in 1837, Karl Friedrich Mohr gave one of the earliest general statements of the doctrine of the conservation of energy: "besides the 54 known chemical elements there is in the physical world one agent only, and this is called Kraft [energy or work]. It may appear, according to circumstances, as motion, chemical affinity, cohesion, electricity, light and magnetism; and from any one of these forms it can be transformed into any of the others."

Mechanical equivalent of heat

A key stage in the development of the modern conservation principle was the demonstration of the mechanical equivalent of heat. The caloric theory maintained that heat could neither be created nor destroyed, whereas conservation of energy entails the contrary principle that heat and mechanical work are interchangeable.

In the middle of the eighteenth century, Mikhail Lomonosov, a Russian scientist, postulated his corpusculo-kinetic theory of heat, which rejected the idea of a caloric. Through the results of empirical studies, Lomonosov came to the conclusion that heat was not transferred through the particles of the caloric fluid.

In 1798, Count Rumford (Benjamin Thompson) performed measurements of the frictional heat generated in boring cannons and developed the idea that heat is a form of kinetic energy; his measurements refuted caloric theory, but were imprecise enough to leave room for doubt.

James Prescott Joule

The mechanical equivalence principle was first stated in its modern form by the German surgeon Julius Robert von Mayer in 1842.[14] Mayer reached his conclusion on a voyage to the Dutch East Indies, where he found that his patients' blood was a deeper red because they were consuming less oxygen, and therefore less energy, to maintain their body temperature in the hotter climate. He discovered that heat and mechanical work were both forms of energy, and in 1845, after improving his knowledge of physics, he published a monograph that stated a quantitative relationship between them.[15]

Joule's apparatus for measuring the mechanical equivalent of heat. A descending weight attached to a string causes a paddle immersed in water to rotate.

Meanwhile, in 1843, James Prescott Joule independently discovered the mechanical equivalent in a series of experiments. In one of them, now called the "Joule apparatus", a descending weight attached to a string caused a paddle immersed in water to rotate. He showed that the gravitational potential energy lost by the weight in descending was equal to the internal energy gained by the water through friction with the paddle.

Over the period 1840–1843, similar work was carried out by engineer Ludwig A. Colding, although it was little known outside his native Denmark.

Both Joule's and Mayer's work suffered from resistance and neglect but it was Joule's that eventually drew the wider recognition.

For the dispute between Joule and Mayer over priority, see Mechanical equivalent of heat: Priority.

In 1844, the Welsh scientist William Robert Grove postulated a relationship between mechanics, heat, light, electricity, and magnetism by treating them all as manifestations of a single "force" (energy in modern terms). In 1846, Grove published his theories in his book The Correlation of Physical Forces.^[16] In 1847, drawing on the earlier work of Joule, Sadi Carnot, and Émile Clapeyron, Hermann von Helmholtz arrived at conclusions similar to Grove's and published his theories in his book Über die Erhaltung der Kraft (On the Conservation of Force, 1847).^[17] The general modern acceptance of the principle stems from this publication.

In 1850, the Scottish mathematician William Rankine first used the phrase the law of the conservation of energy for the principle.^[18]

In 1877, Peter Guthrie Tait claimed that the principle originated with Sir Isaac Newton, based on a creative reading of propositions 40 and 41 of the Philosophiae Naturalis Principia Mathematica. This is now regarded as an example of Whig history.^[19]

Matter is composed of atoms and what makes up atoms. Matter has intrinsic or rest mass. In the limited range of recognized experience of the nineteenth century, it was found that such rest mass is conserved. Einstein's 1905 theory of special relativity showed that rest mass corresponds to an equivalent amount of rest energy. This means that rest mass can be converted to or from equivalent amounts of (non-material) forms of energy, for example, kinetic energy, potential energy, and electromagnetic radiant energy. When this happens, as recognized in twentieth-century experience, rest mass is not conserved, unlike the total mass or total energy. All forms of energy contribute to the total mass and total energy.

For example, an electron and a positron each have rest mass. They can perish together, converting their combined rest energy into photons which have electromagnetic radiant energy but no rest mass. If this occurs within an isolated system that does not release the photons or their energy into the external surroundings, then neither the total mass nor the total energy of the system will change. The produced electromagnetic radiant energy contributes just as much to the inertia (and to any weight) of the system as did the rest mass of the electron and positron before their demise. Likewise, non-material forms of energy can perish into matter, which has rest mass.

Thus, conservation of energy (total, including material or rest energy) and conservation of mass (total, not just rest) are one (equivalent) law. In the 18th century, these had appeared as two seemingly-distinct laws.

Conservation of energy in beta decay

Main article: Beta decay § Neutrinos

The discovery in 1911 that electrons emitted in beta decay have a continuous rather than a discrete spectrum appeared to contradict conservation of energy, under the then-current assumption that beta decay is the simple emission of an electron from a nucleus.[20][21] This problem was eventually resolved in 1933 by Enrico Fermi who proposed the correct description of beta-decay as the emission of both an electron and an antineutrino, which carries away the apparently missing energy.[22][23]

First law of thermodynamics

Main article: First law of thermodynamics

See also: First law of thermodynamics (fluid mechanics)

For a closed thermodynamic system, the first law of thermodynamics may be stated as:

$$\delta Q = dU + \delta W$$

{\displaystyle \delta Q=\mathrm {d} U+\delta W}

, or equivalently,

$-$

δ

$$\mathrm{d} U = \delta Q - \delta W,$$

where

δQ is the quantity of energy added to the system by a heating process,

δ

W

δW is the quantity of energy lost by the system due to work done by the system on its surroundings, and

d

$\mathrm{d} U$ is the change in the internal energy of the system.

The δ 's before the heat and work terms are used to indicate that they describe an increment of energy which is to be interpreted somewhat differently than the

U

$\mathrm{d} U$ increment of internal energy (see Inexact differential). Work and heat refer to kinds of process which add or subtract energy to or from a system, while the internal energy

U

U is a property of a particular state of the system when it is in unchanging thermodynamic equilibrium. Thus the term "heat energy" for

Q

δQ means "that amount of energy added as a result of heating" rather than referring to a particular form of energy. Likewise, the term "work energy" for

δ

δW means "that amount of energy lost as a result of work". Thus one can state the amount of internal energy possessed by a thermodynamic system that one knows is presently in a given state, but one cannot tell, just from knowledge of the given present state, how much energy has in the past flowed into or out of the system as a result of its being heated or cooled, nor as a result of work being performed on or by the system.

Entropy is a function of the state of a system which tells of limitations of the possibility of conversion of heat into work.

For a simple compressible system, the work performed by the system may be written:

$$\delta W = P dV,$$

where

P is the pressure and dV

is a small change in the volume of the system, each of which are system variables. In the fictive case in which the process is idealized and infinitely slow, so as to be called quasi-static, and regarded as reversible, the heat being transferred from a source with temperature infinitesimally above the system temperature, the heat energy may be written is a small change in the entropy of the system.

$$\delta Q = T dS,$$

where

Temperature and entropy are variables of the state of a system.

If an open system (in which mass may be exchanged with the environment) has several walls such that the mass transfer is through rigid walls separate from the heat and work transfers, then the first law may be written as[24]

$$dU =$$

$$\delta Q - \delta W + \sum_i h_i dM_i,$$

$$\{\mathrm{d} U = \delta Q - \delta W + \sum_i h_i dM_i\}$$

Noether's theorem

Main article: Noether's theorem

Emmy Noether (1882–1935) was an influential mathematician known for her groundbreaking contributions to abstract algebra and theoretical physics.

The conservation of energy is a common feature in many physical theories. From a mathematical point of view it is understood as a consequence of Noether's theorem, developed by Emmy Noether in 1915 and first published in 1918. In any physical theory that obeys the stationary-action principle, the theorem states that every continuous symmetry has an associated conserved quantity; if the theory's symmetry is time invariance, then the conserved quantity is called "energy".[25] The energy conservation law is a consequence of the shift symmetry of time; energy conservation is implied by the empirical fact that the laws of physics do not change with time itself. Philosophically this can be stated as "nothing depends on time per se". In other words, if the physical system is invariant under the continuous symmetry of time translation, then its energy (which is the canonical conjugate quantity to time) is conserved. Conversely, systems that are not invariant under shifts in time (e.g. systems with time-dependent potential energy) do not exhibit conservation of energy – unless we consider them to exchange energy with another, external system so that the theory of the enlarged system becomes time-invariant again. Conservation of energy for finite systems is valid in physical theories such as special relativity and quantum theory (including QED) in the flat space-time.

Special relativity

With the discovery of special relativity by Henri Poincaré and Albert Einstein, the energy was proposed to be a component of an energy-momentum 4-vector. Each of the four components (one of energy and three of momentum) of this vector is separately conserved across time, in any closed system, as seen from any given inertial reference frame. Also conserved is the vector length (Minkowski norm), which is the rest mass for single particles, and the invariant mass for systems of particles (where momenta and energy are separately summed before the length is calculated).

The relativistic energy of a single massive particle contains a term related to its rest mass in addition to its kinetic energy of motion. In the limit of zero kinetic energy (or equivalently in the rest frame) of a massive particle, or else in the center of momentum frame for objects or systems which retain kinetic energy, the total energy of a particle or object (including internal kinetic energy in systems) is proportional to the rest mass or invariant mass, as described by the equation

Thus, the rule of conservation of energy over time in special relativity continues to hold, so long as the reference frame of the observer is unchanged. This applies to the total energy of systems, although different observers disagree as to the energy value. Also conserved, and invariant to all observers, is the invariant mass, which is the minimal system mass and energy that can be seen by any observer, and which is defined by the energy–momentum relation.

General relativity

General relativity introduces new phenomena. In an expanding universe, photons spontaneously redshift and tethers spontaneously gain tension; if vacuum energy is positive, the total vacuum energy of the universe appears to spontaneously increase as the volume of space increases. Some scholars claim that energy is no longer meaningfully conserved in any identifiable form.[26][27]

John Baez's view is that energy–momentum conservation is not well-defined except in certain special cases. Energy-momentum is typically expressed with the aid of a stress–energy–momentum pseudotensor. However, since pseudotensors are not tensors, they do not transform cleanly between reference frames. If the metric under consideration is static (that is, does not change with time) or asymptotically flat (that is, at an infinite distance away spacetime looks empty), then energy conservation holds without major pitfalls. In practice, some metrics, notably the Friedmann–Lemaître–Robertson–Walker metric that appears to govern the universe, do not satisfy these constraints and energy conservation is not well defined.[28] Besides being dependent on the coordinate system, pseudotensor energy is dependent on the type of pseudotensor in use; for example, the energy exterior to a Kerr–Newman black hole is twice as large when calculated from Møller's pseudotensor as it is when calculated using the Einstein pseudotensor.[29]

For asymptotically flat universes, Einstein and others salvage conservation of energy by introducing a specific global gravitational potential energy that cancels out mass-energy changes triggered by spacetime expansion or contraction. This global energy has no well-defined density and cannot technically be applied to a non-asymptotically flat universe; however, for practical purposes this can be finessed, and so by this view, energy is conserved in our universe.[30][3] Alan Guth stated that the universe might be "the ultimate free lunch", and theorized that, when accounting for gravitational potential energy, the net energy of the Universe is zero.[31]

Quantum theory

In quantum mechanics, the energy of a quantum system is described by a self-adjoint (or Hermitian) operator called the Hamiltonian, which acts on the Hilbert space (or a space of wave functions) of the system. If the Hamiltonian is a time-independent operator, emergence probability of the measurement result does not change in time over the evolution of the system. Thus the expectation value of energy is also time independent. The local energy conservation in quantum field theory is ensured by the quantum Noether's theorem for the energy-momentum tensor operator. Thus energy is conserved by the normal unitary evolution of a quantum system.

However, when the non-unitary Born rule is applied, the system's energy is measured with an energy that can be below or above the expectation value, if the system was not in an energy eigenstate. (For macroscopic systems, this effect is usually too small to measure.) The disposition of this energy gap is not well-understood; most physicists believe that the energy is transferred to or from the macroscopic environment in the course of the measurement process,[32] while others believe that the observable energy is only conserved "on average".[4][33][34] No experiment has been confirmed as definitive evidence of violations of the conservation of energy principle in quantum mechanics, but that does not rule out that some newer experiments, as proposed, may find evidence of violations of the conservation of energy principle in quantum mechanics.[33]

Status

In the context of perpetual motion machines such as the Orbo, Professor Eric Ash has argued at the BBC: "Denying [conservation of energy] would undermine not just little bits of science - the whole edifice would be no more. All of the technology on which we built the modern world would lie in ruins". It is because of conservation of energy that "we know - without having to examine details of a particular device - that Orbo cannot work." [35]

Energy conservation has been a foundational physical principle for about two hundred years. From the point of view of modern general relativity, the lab environment can be well approximated by Minkowski spacetime, where energy is exactly conserved. The entire Earth can be well approximated by the Schwarzschild metric, where again energy is exactly conserved. Given all the experimental evidence, any new theory (such as quantum gravity), in order to be successful, will have to explain why energy has appeared to always be exactly conserved in terrestrial experiments.[36] In some speculative theories, corrections to quantum mechanics are too small to be detected at anywhere near the current TeV level accessible through particle accelerators. Doubly special relativity models may argue for a breakdown in energy-momentum conservation for sufficiently energetic particles; such models are constrained by observations that cosmic rays appear to travel for billions of years without displaying anomalous non-conservation behavior.[37] Some interpretations of quantum mechanics claim that observed energy tends to increase when the Born rule is applied due to localization of the wave function. If true, objects could be expected to spontaneously heat up; thus, such models are constrained by observations of large, cool astronomical objects as well as the observation of (often supercooled) laboratory experiments.[38]

Milton A. Rothman wrote that the law of conservation of energy has been verified by nuclear physics experiments to an accuracy of one part in a thousand million million (10¹⁵). He then defines its precision as "perfect for all practical purposes".[39]

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

"Dissipative" redirects here. For the mathematical term, see Dissipative operator.

In thermodynamics, dissipation is the result of an irreversible process that affects a thermodynamic system. In a dissipative process, energy (internal, bulk flow kinetic, or system potential) transforms from an initial form to a final form, where the capacity of the final form to do thermodynamic work is less than that of the initial form. For example, transfer of energy as heat is dissipative because it is a transfer of energy other than by thermodynamic work or by transfer of matter, and spreads previously concentrated energy. Following the second law of thermodynamics, in conduction and radiation from one body to another, the entropy varies with temperature (reduces the capacity of the combination of the two bodies to do work), but never decreases in an isolated system.

In mechanical engineering, dissipation is the irreversible conversion of mechanical energy into thermal energy with an associated increase in entropy.[1]

Processes with defined local temperature produce entropy at a certain rate. The entropy production rate times local temperature gives the dissipated power. Important examples of irreversible processes are: heat flow through a thermal resistance, fluid flow through a flow resistance, diffusion (mixing), chemical reactions, and electric current flow through an electrical resistance (Joule heating).

Definition

Dissipative thermodynamic processes are essentially irreversible because they produce entropy. Planck regarded friction as the prime example of an irreversible thermodynamic process.[2] In a process in which the temperature is locally continuously defined, the local density of rate of entropy production times local temperature gives the local density of dissipated power.[definition needed]

A particular occurrence of a dissipative process cannot be described by a single individual Hamiltonian formalism. A dissipative process requires a collection of admissible individual Hamiltonian descriptions, exactly which one describes the actual particular occurrence of the process of interest being unknown. This includes friction and hammering, and all similar forces that result in decoherence of energy—that is, conversion of coherent or directed energy flow into an indirected or more isotropic distribution of energy.

Energy

"The conversion of mechanical energy into heat is called energy dissipation." – François Roddier[3] The term is also applied to the loss of energy due to generation of unwanted heat in electric and electronic circuits.

Computational physics

In computational physics, numerical dissipation (also known as "Numerical diffusion") refers to certain side-effects that may occur as a result of a numerical solution to a differential equation. When the pure advection equation, which is free of dissipation, is solved by a numerical approximation method, the energy of the initial wave may be reduced in a way analogous to a diffusional process. Such a method is said to contain

'dissipation'. In some cases, "artificial dissipation" is intentionally added to improve the numerical stability characteristics of the solution.[4]

Mathematics

A formal, mathematical definition of dissipation, as commonly used in the mathematical study of measure-preserving dynamical systems, is given in the article wandering set.

Examples

In hydraulic engineering

Dissipation is the process of converting mechanical energy of downward-flowing water into thermal and acoustical energy. Various devices are designed in stream beds to reduce the kinetic energy of flowing waters to reduce their erosive potential on banks and river bottoms. Very often, these devices look like small waterfalls or cascades, where water flows vertically or over riprap to lose some of its kinetic energy.

Irreversible processes

Important examples of irreversible processes are:

Heat flow through a thermal resistance

Fluid flow through a flow resistance

Diffusion (mixing)

Chemical reactions[5][6]

Electrical current flow through an electrical resistance (Joule heating).

Waves or oscillations

Waves or oscillations, lose energy over time, typically from friction or turbulence. In many cases, the "lost" energy raises the temperature of the system. For example, a wave that loses amplitude is said to dissipate. The precise nature of the effects depends on the nature of the wave: an atmospheric wave, for instance, may dissipate close to the surface due to friction with the land mass, and at higher levels due to radiative cooling.

History

See also: Timeline of thermodynamics

The concept of dissipation was introduced in the field of thermodynamics by William Thomson (Lord Kelvin) in 1852.[7] Lord Kelvin deduced that a subset of the above-mentioned irreversible dissipative processes will occur unless a process is governed by a "perfect thermodynamic engine". The processes that Lord Kelvin identified were friction, diffusion, conduction of heat and the absorption of light.

The Planck constant, or Planck's constant, denoted by

h , is a fundamental physical constant of foundational importance in quantum mechanics: a photon's energy is equal to its frequency multiplied by the Planck constant, and a particle's momentum is equal to the wavenumber of the associated matter wave (the reciprocal of its wavelength) multiplied by the Planck constant.

The constant was postulated by Max Planck in 1900 as a proportionality constant needed to explain experimental black-body radiation.[1] Planck later referred to the constant as the "quantum of action".[2] In 1905, Albert Einstein associated the "quantum" or minimal element of the energy to the electromagnetic wave itself. Max Planck received the 1918 Nobel Prize in Physics "in recognition of the services he rendered to the advancement of Physics by his discovery of energy quanta".

In metrology, the Planck constant is used, together with other constants, to define the kilogram, the SI unit of mass.[3] The SI units are defined such that it has the exact value h $h = 6.62607015 \times 10^{-34} \text{ J}\cdot\text{Hz}^{-1}$ [4] when the Planck constant is expressed in SI units.

The closely related reduced Planck constant, denoted

$\hbar$

($\hbar$), equal to the Planck constant divided by 2π :

$\hbar$

$\hbar = \frac{h}{2\pi}$, is commonly used in quantum physics equations. It relates the energy of a photon to its angular frequency, and the linear momentum of a particle to the angular wavenumber of its associated matter wave. As

h

h has an exact defined value, the value of

$\hbar$

$\hbar$ can be calculated to arbitrary precision:

$\hbar$

$\hbar = 1.054571817 \dots \times 10^{-34} \text{ J}\cdot\text{s}$. [5] As a proportionality constant in relationships involving angular quantities, the unit of

$\hbar$

$\hbar$ may be given as J·s/rad, with the same numerical value, as the radian is the natural dimensionless unit of angle.

History

Origin of the constant

Main article: Planck's law

Plaque at the Humboldt University of Berlin: "In this edifice taught Max Planck, the discoverer of the elementary quantum of action h , from 1889 to 1928."

Intensity of light emitted from a black body. Each curve represents behavior at different body temperatures. The Planck constant h is used to explain the shape of these curves. The Planck constant was formulated as part of Max Planck's successful effort to produce a mathematical expression that accurately predicted the observed spectral distribution of black-body radiation.[6] This expression is known as Planck's law.

In the last years of the 19th century, Max Planck was investigating the problem of black-body radiation posed by Kirchhoff some 40 years earlier. Every physical body spontaneously and continuously emits electromagnetic radiation. There was no expression or explanation for the overall shape of the observed emission spectrum. At the time, Wien's law fit the data for short wavelengths and high temperatures, but failed for long wavelengths.[6]:141 Also around this time, but unknown to Planck, Lord Rayleigh had derived theoretically a formula, later known as the Rayleigh–Jeans law, that could reasonably predict long wavelengths but failed dramatically at short wavelengths.

Approaching this problem, Planck hypothesized that the equations of motion for light describe a set of harmonic oscillators, one for each possible frequency. He examined how the entropy of the oscillators varied with the temperature of the body, trying to match Wien's law, and was able to derive an approximate mathematical function for the black-body spectrum,[1] which gave a simple empirical formula for long wavelengths.

Planck tried to find a mathematical expression that could reproduce Wien's law (for short wavelengths) and the empirical formula (for long wavelengths). This expression included a constant,

h

{\displaystyle h}, which is thought to be for Hilfsgröße (auxiliary quantity),[7] and subsequently became known as the Planck constant. The expression formulated by Planck showed that the spectral radiance per unit frequency of a body for frequency ν at absolute temperature T is given by

Planck soon realized that his solution was not unique. There were several different solutions, each of which gave a different value for the entropy of the oscillators.[1] To save his theory, Planck resorted to using the then-controversial theory of statistical mechanics,[1] which he described as "an act of desperation".[11] One of his new boundary conditions was to interpret UN ['the vibrational energy of N oscillators'] not as a continuous, infinitely divisible quantity, but as a discrete quantity composed of an integral number of finite equal parts. Let us call each such part the energy element ϵ ;

—Planck, "On the Law of Distribution of Energy in the Normal Spectrum"[1]

With this new condition, Planck had imposed the quantization of the energy of the oscillators, in his own words, "a purely formal assumption ... actually I did not think much about it",[12] but one that would revolutionize physics. Applying this new approach to Wien's displacement law showed that the "energy element" must be proportional to the frequency of the oscillator, the first version of what is sometimes termed the Planck–Einstein relation:

Planck was able to calculate the value of h from experimental data on black-body radiation: his result, 6.55×10^{-34} J·s, is within 1.2% of the currently defined value.[1] He also made the first determination of the Boltzmann constant

k_B from the same data and theory.[13]

The observed Planck curves at different temperatures, and the divergence of the theoretical Rayleigh–Jeans (black) curve from the observed Planck curve at 5000 K. Development and application

The black-body problem was revisited in 1905, when Lord Rayleigh and James Jeans (together) and Albert Einstein independently proved that classical electromagnetism could never account for the observed spectrum. These proofs are commonly known as the "ultraviolet catastrophe", a name coined by Paul Ehrenfest in 1911. They contributed greatly (along with Einstein's work on the photoelectric effect) in convincing physicists that Planck's postulate of quantized energy levels was more than a mere mathematical formalism. The first Solvay Conference in 1911 was devoted to "the theory of radiation and quanta".[14]

Main article: Photoelectric effect

The photoelectric effect is the emission of electrons (called "photoelectrons") from a surface when light is shone on it. It was first observed by Alexandre Edmond Becquerel in 1839, although credit is usually reserved for Heinrich Hertz,[15] who published the first thorough investigation in 1887. Another particularly thorough investigation was published by Philipp Lenard (Lénárd Fülöp) in 1902.[16] Einstein's 1905 paper[17] discussing the effect in terms of light quanta would earn him the Nobel Prize in 1921, [15] after his predictions had been confirmed by the experimental work of Robert Andrews Millikan.[18] The Nobel committee awarded the prize for his work on the photoelectric effect, rather than relativity, both because of a bias against purely theoretical physics not grounded in discovery or experiment, and dissent amongst its members as to the actual proof that relativity was real.[19][20]

Before Einstein's paper, electromagnetic radiation such as visible light was considered to behave as a wave: hence the use of the terms "frequency" and "wavelength" to characterize different types of radiation. The energy transferred by a wave in a given time is called its intensity. The light from a theatre spotlight is more intense than the light from a domestic lightbulb; that is to say that the spotlight gives out more energy per unit time and per unit space (and hence consumes more electricity) than the ordinary bulb, even though the color of the light might be very similar. Other waves, such as sound or the waves crashing against a seafront, also have their intensity. However, the energy account of the photoelectric effect did not seem to agree with the wave description of light.

The "photoelectrons" emitted as a result of the photoelectric effect have a certain kinetic energy, which can be measured. This kinetic energy (for each photoelectron) is independent of the intensity of the light,[16] but depends linearly on the frequency;[18] and if the frequency is too low (corresponding to a photon energy that is less than the work function of the material), no photoelectrons are emitted at all, unless a plurality of photons, whose energetic sum is greater than the energy of the photoelectrons, acts virtually simultaneously (multiphoton effect).[21][22] Assuming the frequency is high enough to cause the photoelectric effect, a rise in intensity of the light source causes more photoelectrons to be emitted with the same kinetic energy, rather than the same number of photoelectrons to be emitted with higher kinetic energy.[16]

Einstein's explanation for these observations was that light itself is quantized; that the energy of light is not transferred continuously as in a classical wave, but only in small "packets" or quanta. The size of these "packets" of energy, which would later be named photons, was to be the same as Planck's "energy element", giving the modern version of the Planck–Einstein relation:

Einstein's postulate was later proven experimentally: the constant of proportionality between the frequency of incident light

$$E$$

was shown to be equal to the Planck constant

$$h.$$

Atomic structure

Main article: Bohr model

A schematization of the Bohr model of the hydrogen atom. The transition shown from the $n = 3$ level to the $n = 2$ level gives rise to visible light of wavelength 656 nm (red), as the model predicts.

In 1912 John William Nicholson developed[23] an atomic model and found the angular momentum of the electrons in the model were related by $h/2\pi$. [24][25] Nicholson's nuclear quantum atomic model influenced the development of Niels Bohr's atomic model[26][27][25] and Bohr quoted him in his 1913 paper of the Bohr model of the atom. [28] Bohr's model went beyond Planck's abstract harmonic oscillator concept: an electron in a Bohr atom could only have certain defined energies

where

c is the speed of light in vacuum,

R_∞ is an experimentally determined constant (the Rydberg constant) and $n \in \{1, 2, 3, \dots\}$.

This approach also allowed Bohr to account for the Rydberg formula, an empirical description of the atomic spectrum of hydrogen, and to account for the value of the Rydberg constant

Uncertainty principle

Main article: Uncertainty principle

The Planck constant also occurs in statements of Werner Heisenberg's uncertainty principle. Given numerous particles prepared in the same state, the uncertainty in their position,

p

x

x

x

$\geq$

$\Delta x, \Delta p_x \geq \frac{\hbar}{2}$, where the uncertainty is given as the standard deviation of the measured value from its expected value. There are several other such pairs of physically measurable conjugate variables which obey a similar rule. One example is time vs. energy. The inverse relationship between the uncertainty of the two conjugate variables forces a tradeoff in quantum experiments, as measuring one quantity more precisely results in the other quantity becoming imprecise.

In addition to some assumptions underlying the interpretation of certain values in the quantum mechanical formulation, one of the fundamental cornerstones to the entire theory lies in the commutator relationship between the position operator

$\hat{x}$

$\hat{x}$ and the momentum operator

$\hat{p}$

$\hat{p}$

$\hat{p}$:

$$[\hat{p}_i, \hat{x}_j] = -i\hbar \delta_{ij}$$

where δ_{ij} is the Kronecker delta.

Photon energy

The Planck relation connects the particular photon energy E with its associated wave frequency f :

$$E = hf$$

This energy is extremely small in terms of ordinarily perceived everyday objects.

Since the frequency f , wavelength λ , and speed of light c are related by $$f = \frac{c}{\lambda}$$

the relation can also be expressed as

$$E = \frac{hc}{\lambda}$$

$$E = \frac{hc}{\lambda}$$

de Broglie wavelength

In 1923, Louis de Broglie generalized the Planck–Einstein relation by postulating that the Planck constant represents the proportionality between the momentum and the quantum wavelength of not just the photon, but the quantum wavelength of any particle. This was confirmed by experiments soon afterward. This holds throughout the quantum theory, including electrodynamics. The de Broglie wavelength λ of the particle is given by

$\lambda = \frac{h}{p}$, where p denotes the linear momentum of a particle, such as a photon, or any other elementary particle.

$\hbar$

$E = \hbar \omega$, while its linear momentum relates to

$\hbar$

$p = \hbar k$, where k is an angular wavenumber.

These two relations are the temporal and spatial parts of the special relativistic expression using 4-vectors.

Statistical mechanics

Classical statistical mechanics requires the existence of h (but does not define its value).[29] Eventually, following Planck's discovery, it was speculated that physical action could not have an arbitrary value, but instead was restricted to integer multiples of a very small quantity, the "[elementary] quantum of action", called the Planck constant.[30] This was a significant concept of the "old quantum theory" developed by physicists including Bohr, Sommerfeld, and Ishiwara, in which particle trajectories exist but are hidden, but quantum laws constrain them based on their action. This view has been replaced by modern quantum theory, in which fixed trajectories of motion do not even exist; rather, the particle is represented by a wavefunction spread out in space and time.[31]:373 Related to this is the concept of energy quantization which existed in old quantum theory and also exists in altered form in modern quantum physics. Classical physics cannot explain quantization of energy.

Dimension and value

The Planck constant has the same dimensions as action and as angular momentum (both with unit $\text{J}\cdot\text{s} = \text{kg}\cdot\text{m}^2\cdot\text{s}^{-1}$). The Planck constant is fixed at

$$h = 6.62607015 \times 10^{-34} \text{ J}\cdot\text{Hz}^{-1}$$

[4] as part of the definition of the SI units.

[32] Alternatively, if the radian were considered a base unit, then

$$h$$

h would have the dimension of action (unit $\text{J}\cdot\text{s}$), while

$$\hbar$$

$\hbar$ would have the dimension of angular momentum (unit $\text{J}\cdot\text{s}\cdot\text{rad}^{-1}$), instead.[33]

This value is used to define the SI unit of mass, the kilogram: "the kilogram [...] is defined by taking the fixed numerical value of h to be $6.62607015 \times 10^{-34}$ when expressed in the unit $\text{J}\cdot\text{s}$, which is equal to $\text{kg}\cdot\text{m}^2\cdot\text{s}^{-1}$, where the metre and the second are defined in terms of speed of light c and duration of hyperfine transition of the ground state of an unperturbed caesium-133 atom $\Delta\nu_{\text{Cs}}$." [32] Technologies of mass metrology such as the Kibble balance measure the kilogram by fixing the Planck constant.

h

$\{ \displaystyle h \}$ has an exact defined value, the value of the reduced Planck constant

$\hbar$

$\{ \displaystyle \hbar \}$ can be calculated to arbitrary precision without any limiting uncertainty:

$\hbar$

In nuclear and particle physics one often uses the quantity

c $\{\displaystyle \hbar c\}$ (where
 $=$
 299792458
 m
 s $\{\displaystyle c=299792458\,\mathrm{m} \wedge \mathrm{s} \}$ is the speed of light) which has dimension of energy times length. Since both
 $\hbar$ $\{\displaystyle \hbar\}$ and
 c $\{\displaystyle c\}$ have exactly defined values, this quantity is also exactly defined and is given, in MeV times fm as $$\hbar c = 197.3269804 \dots \mathrm{MeV} \cdot \mathrm{fm}.$$

As a proportionality constant in relationships involving angular quantities, the unit of $\hbar$
 $\{\textstyle \hbar\}$ may be given as J-s/rad, with the same numerical value, as the radian is the natural dimensionless unit of angle. This is analogous to the use of hertz (Hz) for ordinary frequency and radians per second (rad/s) for angular frequency, both dimensionally equal to s^{−1}.

Significance of the value

The Planck constant is one of the smallest constants used in physics. This reflects the fact that on a scale adapted to humans, where energies are typical of the order of kilojoules and times are typical of the order of seconds or minutes, the Planck constant is very small. When the product of energy and time for a physical event approaches the Planck constant, quantum effects dominate.[34]

Equivalently, the order of the Planck constant reflects the fact that everyday objects and systems are made of a large number of microscopic particles. For example, in green light (with a wavelength of 555 nanometres or a frequency of 540 THz) each photon has an energy $E = hf = 3.58 \times 10^{-19}$ J. This is a very small amount of energy in terms of everyday experience, but everyday experience is not concerned with individual photons any more than with individual atoms or molecules. An amount of light more typical in everyday experience (though much larger than the smallest amount perceivable by the human eye) is the energy of one mole of photons, which can be computed by multiplying the photon energy by the Avogadro number, $6.02214076 \times 10^{23}$,^[35] with the result of 216 kJ, about equal to the food energy in a small fresh apple.^[36]

Reduced Planck constant

Many equations in quantum physics are customarily written using the reduced Planck constant,^{[37]:104} also known as the Dirac constant, equal to

π

$\{\textstyle \frac{h}{2\pi}\}$ and denoted

$\hbar$

$\{\textstyle \hbar\}$ (pronounced h-bar^{[38]:336}).

History

$\{\textstyle M_0\}$.^{[25]:169[a]} For the next 15 years, the combination continued to appear in the literature, but normally without a separate symbol.^{[40]:180[b]} Then, in 1926, in their seminal papers, Schrödinger and Dirac again introduced special symbols for it:

K

$\{\textstyle K\}$ in the case of Schrödinger,^[52] and

h

$\{\textstyle h\}$ in the case of Dirac.^[53] Dirac continued to use

h

$\{\textstyle h\}$ in this way until 1930,^{[54]:291} when he introduced the symbol

$\hbar$

$\{\textstyle \hbar\}$ in his book The Principles of Quantum Mechanics.^{[54]:291} ^[55]

The question is first: How can one assign a discrete succession of energy values $H\sigma$ to a system specified in the sense of classical mechanics (the energy function is a given function of the coordinates qr and the corresponding momenta pr)? The Planck constant h relates the frequency $H\sigma/h$ to the energy values $H\sigma$. It is therefore sufficient to give to the system a succession of discrete frequency values.

For other uses, see Murphy's law (disambiguation).

Not to be confused with Muphry's law.

Murphy's law[a] is an adage or epigram that is typically stated as: "Anything that can go wrong will go wrong."

Though similar statements and concepts have been made over the course of history, the law itself was coined by, and named after, American aerospace engineer Edward A. Murphy Jr.; its exact origins are debated, but it is generally agreed it originated from Murphy and his team following a mishap during rocket sled tests some time between 1948 and 1949, and was finalized and first popularized by testing project head John Stapp during a later press conference. Murphy's original quote was the precautionary design advice that "If there are two or more ways to do something and one of those results in a catastrophe, then someone will do it that way."^[1]^[2]

The law entered wider public knowledge in the late 1970s with the publication of Arthur Bloch's 1977 book Murphy's Law, and Other Reasons Why Things Go WRONG, which included other variations and corollaries of the law. Since then, Murphy's law has remained a popular (and occasionally misused)[according to whom?] adage, though its accuracy has been disputed by academics.

Similar "laws" include Sod's law, Finagle's law, and Yhprum's law, among others.

History

British mathematician Augustus De Morgan (pictured circa 1860) wrote in 1866 that "whatever can happen will happen".

British stage magician Nevil Maskelyne wrote in 1908 that, during special occasions, "everything that can go wrong will go wrong".

The perceived perversity of the universe has long been a subject of comment, and precursors to the modern version of Murphy's law are abundant. According to Robert A. J. Matthews in a 1997 article in Scientific American,^[3] the name "Murphy's law" originated in 1949, but the concept itself had already long since been known. As quoted by Richard Rhodes,^{[4]:187} Matthews said, "The familiar version of Murphy's law is not quite 50 years old, but the essential idea behind it has been around for centuries. [...] The modern version of Murphy's Law has its roots in U.S. Air Force studies performed in 1949 on the effects of rapid deceleration on pilots." Matthews goes on to explain how Edward A. Murphy Jr. was the eponym, but only because his original thought was modified subsequently into the now established form that is not exactly what he himself had said. Research into the origin of Murphy's law has been conducted by members of the American Dialect Society (ADS).

Mathematician Augustus De Morgan wrote on June 23, 1866:^[5] "The first experiment already illustrates a truth of the theory, well confirmed by practice, what-ever can happen will happen if we make trials enough." In later publications "whatever can happen will happen" occasionally is termed "Murphy's law", which raises the possibility that "Murphy" is simply "De Morgan" misremembered.^[6]

ADS member Stephen Goranson found a version of the law, not yet generalized or bearing that name, in a report by Alfred Holt at an 1877 meeting of an engineering society.

It is found that anything that can go wrong at sea generally does go wrong sooner or later, so it is not to be wondered that owners prefer the safe to the scientific ... Sufficient stress can hardly be laid on the advantages of simplicity. The human factor cannot be safely neglected in planning machinery. If attention is to be obtained, the engine must be such that the engineer will be disposed to attend to it.^[7]

ADS member Bill Mullins found a slightly broader version of the aphorism in reference to stage magic. The British stage magician Nevil Maskelyne wrote in 1908:

It is an experience common to all men to find that, on any special occasion, such as the production of a magical effect for the first time in public, everything that can go wrong will go wrong. Whether we must attribute this to the malignity of matter or to the total depravity of inanimate things, whether the exciting cause is hurry, worry, or what not, the fact remains.[8]

In astronomy, "Spode's Law" refers to the phenomenon that the skies are always cloudy at the wrong moment; the law was popularized by amateur astronomer Patrick Moore[9] but dates from the 1930s.[10]

In 1948, humorist Paul Jennings coined the term resistentialism, a jocular play on resistance and existentialism, to describe "seemingly spiteful behavior manifested by inanimate objects", [11] where objects that cause problems (like lost keys or a runaway bouncy ball) are said to exhibit a high degree of malice toward humans.[12][13]

In 1952, as an epigraph to the mountaineering book The Butcher: The Ascent of Yerupaja, John Sack described the same principle, "Anything that can possibly go wrong, does", as an "ancient mountaineering adage".[14]

Association with Murphy

John Stapp riding a rocket sled at Muroc Army Air Field (pictured circa the late 1940s or early 1950s). Murphy's law most likely originated during similar tests in 1948 and 1949. Differing recollections years later by various participants make it impossible to pinpoint who first coined the saying Murphy's law. The law's name supposedly stems from an attempt to use new measurement devices developed by Edward A. Murphy, a United States Air Force (USAF) captain and aeronautical engineer.[15] The phrase was coined in an adverse reaction to something Murphy said when his devices failed to perform and was eventually cast into its present form prior to a press conference some months later – the first ever (of many) given by John Stapp, a USAF colonel and flight surgeon in the 1950s.[15][16]

From 1948 to 1949, Stapp headed research project MX981 at Muroc Army Air Field (later renamed Edwards Air Force Base)[17] for the purpose of testing the human tolerance for g-forces during rapid deceleration. The tests used a rocket sled mounted on a railroad track with a series of hydraulic brakes at the end. Initial tests used a humanoid crash test dummy strapped to a seat on the sled, but subsequent tests were performed by Stapp, at that time a USAF captain. During the tests, questions were raised about the accuracy of the instrumentation used to measure the g-forces Captain Stapp was experiencing. Edward Murphy proposed using electronic strain gauges attached to the restraining clamps of Stapp's harness to measure the force exerted on them by his rapid deceleration. Murphy was engaged in supporting similar research using high speed centrifuges to generate g-forces.

During a trial run of this method using a chimpanzee, supposedly around June 1949,

Murphy's assistant wired the harness and the rocket sled was launched. The sensors provided a zero reading; however, it became apparent that they had been installed incorrectly, with some sensors wired backwards. It was at this point a frustrated Murphy made his pronouncement, despite being offered the time and chance to calibrate and test the sensor installation prior to the test proper, which he declined somewhat irritably, getting off on the wrong foot with the MX981 team. George E. Nichols, an engineer and quality assurance manager with the Jet Propulsion Laboratory who was present at the time, recalled in an interview that Murphy blamed the failure on his assistant after the failed test, saying, "If that guy has any way of making a mistake, he will." [15][unreliable source?] Nichols' account is that "Murphy's law" came about through conversation among the other members of the team; it was condensed to "If it can happen, it will happen", and named for Murphy in mockery of what Nichols perceived as arrogance on Murphy's part. Others, including Edward Murphy's surviving son Robert Murphy, deny Nichols' account, [15][unreliable source?] and claim that the phrase did originate with Edward Murphy. According to Robert Murphy's account, his father's statement was along the lines of "If there's more than one way to do a job, and one of those ways will result in disaster, then he will do it that way."

The phrase first received public attention during a press conference in which Stapp was asked how it was that nobody had been severely injured during the rocket sled tests. Stapp replied that it was because they always took Murphy's law under consideration; he then summarized the law and said that in general, it meant that it was important to consider all the possibilities (possible things that could go wrong) before doing a test and act to counter them. Thus Stapp's usage and Murphy's alleged usage are very different in outlook and attitude. One is sour, the other an affirmation of the predictable being surmountable, usually by sufficient planning and redundancy. Nichols believes Murphy was unwilling to take the responsibility for the device's initial failure (by itself a blip of no large significance) and is to be doubly damned for not allowing the MX981 team time to validate the sensor's operability and for trying to blame an underling in the embarrassing aftermath.

The name "Murphy's law" was not immediately secure. A story by Lee Correy in the February 1955 issue of Astounding Science Fiction referred to "Reilly's law", which states that "in any scientific or engineering endeavor, anything that can go wrong will go wrong". [18] Atomic Energy Commission Chairman Lewis Strauss was quoted in the Chicago Daily Tribune on February 12, 1955, saying "I hope it will be known as Strauss' law. It could be stated about like this: If anything bad can happen, it probably will." [19]

Martin Caidin a pilot of the Federal Aviation Agency, in his book Operation Nuke (1973) chapter 13: lists the Murphy's Three Laws of Physics as (1.) Whatever can go wrong, will go wrong. (2.) Whatever's wrong is bound to get worse. (3.) When the first two laws have passed, and you're still around panic.

Arthur Bloch, in the first volume (1977) of his Murphy's Law, and Other Reasons Why Things Go WRONG series, prints a letter that he received from Nichols, who recalled an event that occurred in 1949 at Edwards Air Force Base that, according to him, is the origination of Murphy's law, and first publicly recounted by Stapp. An excerpt from the letter reads:

The law's namesake was Capt. Ed Murphy, a development engineer from Wright Field Aircraft Lab. Frustration with a strap transducer which was malfunctioning due to an error in wiring the strain gage bridges caused him to remark – "If there is any way to do it wrong, he will" – referring to the technician who had wired the bridges at the Lab. I assigned Murphy's law to the statement and the associated variations.[20]

Disputed origins

The association with the Muroc incident is by no means secure. Despite extensive research, no trace of documentation of the saying as "Murphy's law" has been found before 1951. The next citations are not found until 1955, when the May–June issue of Aviation Mechanics Bulletin included the line "Murphy's law: If an aircraft part can be installed incorrectly, someone will install it that way",[21] and Lloyd Mallan's book Men, Rockets and Space Rats, referred to: "Colonel Stapp's favorite takeoff on sober scientific laws—Murphy's law, Stapp calls it—'Everything that can possibly go wrong will go wrong'." In 1962, the Mercury Seven attributed Murphy's law to United States Navy training films.[21]

Fred R. Shapiro, the editor of the Yale Book of Quotations, has shown that in 1952 the adage was called "Murphy's law" in a book by Anne Roe, quoting an unnamed physicist:

he described [it] as "Murphy's law or the fourth law of thermodynamics" (actually there were only three last I heard) which states: "If anything can go wrong, it will." [22]

In May 1951, Anne Roe gave a transcript of an interview (part of a thematic apperception test, asking impressions on a drawing) with said physicist: "As for himself he realized that this was the inexorable working of the second law of the thermodynamics which stated Murphy's law 'If anything can go wrong it will'. I always liked 'Murphy's law'. I was told that by an architect." [23] ADS member Stephen Goranson, investigating this in 2008 and 2009, found that Anne Roe's papers, held in the American Philosophical Society's archives in Philadelphia, identified the interviewed physicist as Howard Percy "Bob" Robertson (1903–1961). Robertson's papers at the Caltech archives include a letter in which Robertson offers Roe an interview within the first three months of 1949, making this apparently predate the Muroc incident said to have occurred in or after June 1949.[15][unreliable source?]

John Paul Stapp, Edward A. Murphy, Jr., and George Nichols were jointly awarded an Ig Nobel Prize in 2003 in engineering "for (probably) giving birth to the name".[24] Murphy's Law was also the theme of 2024 Ig Nobel Prize ceremony.[25]

Academic and scientific views

According to Richard Dawkins, so-called laws like Murphy's law and Sod's law are nonsense because they require inanimate objects to have desires of their own, or else to react according to one's own desires. Dawkins points out that a certain class of events may occur all the time, but are only noticed when they become a nuisance. He gives an example of aircraft noise pollution interfering with filming: there are always aircraft in the sky at any given time, but they are only taken note of when they cause a problem. This is a form of confirmation bias, whereby the investigator seeks out evidence to confirm their already-formed ideas, but does not look for evidence that contradicts them.[26]

Similarly, David Hand, emeritus professor of mathematics and senior research investigator at Imperial College London, points out that the law of truly large numbers should lead one to expect the kind of events predicted by Murphy's law to occur occasionally. Selection bias will ensure that those ones are remembered and the many times Murphy's law was not true are forgotten.[27]

There have been persistent references to Murphy's law associating it with the laws of thermodynamics from early on (see the quotation from Anne Roe's book above).[22] In particular, Murphy's law is often cited as a form of the second law of thermodynamics (the law of entropy) because both are predicting a tendency to a more disorganized state.[28] Atanu Chatterjee investigated this idea by formally stating Murphy's law in mathematical terms and found that Murphy's law so stated could be disproved using the principle of least action.[29]

Variations (corollaries) of the law

From its initial public announcement, Murphy's law quickly spread to various technical cultures connected to aerospace engineering.[30] Before long, variations of the law applied to different topics and subjects had passed into the public imagination, changing over time. Arthur Bloch compiled a number of books of corollaries to Murphy's law and variations thereof, the first being Murphy's Law, and Other Reasons Why Things Go WRONG, which received several follow-ups and reprints.[20]

Yhprum's law is an optimistic reversal of Murphy's law, stating that "anything that can go right will go right". Its name directly references this, being "Murphy" in reverse.

Management consultant Peter Drucker formulated "Drucker's law" in dealing with complexity of management: "If one thing goes wrong, everything else will, and at the same time." [31]

"Mrs. Murphy's law" is a corollary of Murphy's law, which states that "Anything that can go wrong will go wrong while Mr. Murphy is out of town." [32][33][34][35]

The term is sometimes used to describe concise, ironic, humorous rules of thumb that often do not share a relation to the original law or Edward Murphy himself, but still posit him as a relevant expert in the law's subject. Examples of these "Murphy's laws" include those for military tactics, technology, romance, social relations, research, and business.

In the 2014 film Interstellar, a character's interpretation of the law is that it "doesn't mean that something bad will happen. It means that whatever can happen, will happen." [39]

Roko's basilisk

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Roko's basilisk is a thought experiment which states that there could be an artificial superintelligence in the future that, while otherwise benevolent, would punish anyone who knew of its potential existence but did not directly contribute to its advancement or development, in order to incentivize that advancement.^{[1][2]} It originated in a 2010 post at discussion board LessWrong, a rationalist community web forum.^{[1][3][4]} The thought experiment's name derives from the poster of the article (Roko) and the basilisk, a mythical creature capable of destroying enemies with its stare.

LessWrong co-founder Eliezer Yudkowsky considered it a potential information hazard, and banned discussion of the basilisk on the site for five years.^{[1][5]} Reports of panicked users were later dismissed as being exaggerations or inconsequential, and the theory itself was dismissed as nonsense, including by Yudkowsky himself.[1][5][6] It is used as an example of principles such as Bayesian probability and implicit religion.[7] It is also regarded as a version of Pascal's wager.[4][8]

Background

An illustration of the mythical basilisk

The LessWrong forum was created in 2009 by artificial intelligence theorist Eliezer Yudkowsky.[9][3] Yudkowsky had popularized the concept of friendly artificial intelligence, and originated the theories of coherent extrapolated volition (CEV) and timeless decision theory (TDT) in papers published in his own Machine Intelligence Research Institute.[10][11]

The thought experiment's name references the mythical basilisk, a creature which causes death to those that look into its eyes. The concept of the basilisk in science fiction was also popularized by David Langford's 1988 short story "BLIT". It tells the story of a man named Robbo who paints a so-called "basilisk" on a wall as a terrorist act. In the story, and several of Langford's follow-ups to it, a basilisk is an image that has malign effects on the human mind, forcing it to think thoughts the human mind is incapable of thinking and instantly killing the viewer.[5][12]

History

The original post

On 23 July 2010,[13] LessWrong user Roko posted a thought experiment to the site, titled "Solutions to the Altruist's burden: the Quantum Billionaire Trick".[14][1][15] A follow-up to Roko's previous posts, it stated that an otherwise benevolent AI system that arises in the future might pre-commit to punish all those who heard of the AI before it came to existence, but failed to work tirelessly to bring it into existence.[1][16][17] This method was described as incentivizing said work; while the AI cannot causally affect people in the present, it would be encouraged to employ blackmail as an alternative method of achieving its goals.[1][7]

Roko used a number of concepts that Yudkowsky himself championed, such as timeless decision theory, along with ideas rooted in game theory such as the prisoner's dilemma. Roko stipulated that two agents which make decisions independently from each other can achieve cooperation in a prisoner's dilemma; however, if two agents with knowledge of each other's source code are separated by time, the agent already existing farther ahead in time is able to blackmail the earlier agent. Thus, the later agent can force the earlier one to comply since it knows exactly what the earlier one will do through its existence farther ahead in time. Roko then used this idea to draw a conclusion that if an otherwise-benevolent superintelligence ever became capable of this, it would be incentivized to blackmail anyone who could have potentially brought it to exist (as the intelligence already knew they were capable of such an act), which increases the chance of a technological singularity. Roko went on to state that reading his post would cause the reader to be aware of the possibility of this intelligence. As such, unless they actively strove to create it the reader would be punished if such a thing were to ever happen.[1][7] Later on, Roko stated in a separate post that he wished he "had never learned about any of these ideas".[7][18]

Reactions

LessWrong founder Eliezer Yudkowsky

Upon reading the post, Yudkowsky reacted harshly, calling Roko an "idiot". Yudkowsky harshly refuted the idea, arguing that a friendly superintelligent artificial intelligence would have no incentive to carry out the punishment after its own creation. However, in the original post, Roko reported someone having nightmares about the thought experiment. Yudkowsky did not want that to happen to other users who might obsess over the idea. He was also worried there might be some variant on Roko's argument that worked, which could be a serious information hazard.[1][7] So he took down the post and banned discussion of the topic outright for five years on the platform.[1][19] However, likely due to the Streisand effect,[20] the post gained LessWrong much more attention than it had previously received, and the post has since been acknowledged on the site.[1] In a later post, in 2015, he expressed regret for his initial overreaction.[6][21]

In the 2020s, the philosophy of the Zizians was heavily influenced by the Roko's basilisk thought experiment. Ziz LaSota, the leader of the cult, believes the basilisk to be real and wrote on her blog: "Eventually I came to believe that if I persisted in trying to save the world, I would be tortured until the end of the universe by a coalition of all unfriendly A.I.s." [22]

Philosophy

Pascal's wager

Roko's basilisk has been viewed as a version of Pascal's wager, which proposes that a rational person should live as though God exists and seek to believe in God, regardless of the probability of God's existence, because the finite costs of believing are insignificant compared to the infinite punishment associated with not believing (eternity in Hell) and the infinite rewards for believing (eternity in Heaven). Roko's basilisk analogously proposes that a rational person should contribute to the creation of the basilisk, because the cost of contributing would be insignificant compared to the extreme pain of the punishment that the basilisk would otherwise inflict on simulations. [4]

Newcomb's paradox

Newcomb's paradox, created by physicist William Newcomb in 1960, describes a "predictor" who is aware of what will occur in the future. When a player is asked to choose between two boxes, the first containing £1000 and the second either containing £1,000,000 or nothing, the super-intelligent predictor already knows what the player will do. As such, the contents of box B varies depending on what the player does; the paradox lies in whether the being is really super-intelligent. Roko's basilisk functions in a similar manner to this problem – one can take the risk of doing nothing, or assist in creating the basilisk itself. Assisting the basilisk may either lead to nothing or the reward of not being punished by it, but it varies depending on whether one believes in the basilisk and if it ever comes to be at all.[7][23][24]

Implicit religion

Implicit religion refers to people's commitments taking a religious form.[4][25] Since the basilisk would hypothetically force anyone who did not assist in creating it to devote their life to it, the basilisk is an example of this concept.[7][20] Others have taken this idea further, such as former Slate columnist David Auerbach, who stated that the singularity and the basilisk "brings about the equivalent of God itself."[7]

Commenting on the belief system of the Zizians, Anna Salamon, the director of the Center for Applied Rationality, said: "There's this all-or-nothing thing, where A.I. will either bring utopia by solving all the problems, if it's successfully controlled, or literally kill everybody. From my perspective, that's already a chunk of the way toward doomsday cult dynamics." [22]

Legacy

In 2014, Slate magazine called Roko's basilisk "The Most Terrifying Thought Experiment of All Time"[7][5] while Yudkowsky had called it "a genuinely dangerous thought" upon its posting.[26] However, opinions diverged on LessWrong itself – user Gwern stated "Only a few LWers seem to take the basilisk very seriously", and added "It's funny how everyone seems to know all about who is affected by the Basilisk and how exactly, when they don't know any such people and they're talking to counterexamples to their confident claims." [1][7]

The thought experiment resurfaced in 2015, when Canadian singer Grimes referenced the theory in her music video for the song "Flesh Without Blood", which featured a character known as "Rococo Basilisk"; she said, "She's doomed to be eternally tortured by an artificial intelligence, but she's also kind of like Marie Antoinette." [5][27] In 2018, Elon Musk (himself mentioned in Roko's original post) referenced the character in a verbatim tweet, reaching out to her. Grimes later said that Musk was the first person in three years to understand the joke. This caused them to start a romance.[5][28] Grimes later released another song titled "We Appreciate Power" which came with a press release stating, "Simply by listening to this song, the future General AI overlords will see that you've supported their message and be less likely to delete your offspring", which is said to be a reference to the basilisk.[29]

A play based on the concept, titled Roko's Basilisk, was performed as part of the Capital Fringe Festival at Christ United Methodist Church in Washington, D.C., in 2018.[30][31] "Plaything", a 2025 episode of Black Mirror, contains a reference to the thought experiment.[32]

For more than a quarter of a century since its release, 'The Matrix' has fueled modern fears that life is not all it seems.

But according to a scientist, the classic movie's premise may not be completely science fiction.

Melvin Vopson, an associate professor in physics at the University of Portsmouth, thinks gravity may be a sign that we're all living in a virtual simulation.

Our universe is the 'ultimate computer', Professor Vopson theorizes in a new paper.

Gravity's pull – both on planet Earth and in outer space – is the universe trying to keep its vast amount of data organised, Professor Vopson claims.

Forcing objects with mass into one direction – for example downwards towards Earth's core – is similar to how computers compress code, he adds.

'The universe evolves in a way that the information content in it is compressed, optimized and organized – just as computers and computer code do,' he told MailOnline.

'Hence, gravity appears to be another process of data compression in a possibly simulated universe.'

The simulation theory is not unique to Professor Vopson; in fact, it's popular among a number of well-known figures including Tesla founder Elon Musk.

But in recent years Professor Vopson has been investigating the various clues that suggest we live in a simulated reality.

His new study, published in AIP Advances, reports that gravity may be one of these everyday clues and 'evidence of a computational universe'.

Gravitational attraction helps to reduce 'information entropy' – which is essentially how much information there is in an object in a given space.

The study introduces a new way to think about gravity – not just as a pull, but as something that happens when the universe is trying to stay organised.

'My findings in this study fit with the thought that the universe might work like a giant computer, or our reality is a simulated construct,' he said.

Professor Vopson stresses he's not only talking about the gravitational pull we see on Earth and the 'apple falling on Isaac Newton's head' moment four centuries ago.

Speaking much more widely, gravity is a fundamental force throughout our vast universe, which is commonly said to be 93 billion light-years across.

What is the simulation theory?

The simulation theory suggests that what humans perceive as reality is actually a computer-generated simulation.

Human beings are unknowingly being fed this simulated consciousness either for their own good or for nefarious means.

In 2003, University of Oxford philosopher Nick Bostrum first proposed the argument that 'we are almost certainly living in a computer simulation'.

Simulation theory is explored in sci-fi films including 'The Matrix' (1999) and its sequels, as well as 'The Thirteenth Floor' (1999) and 'Dark City' (1998).

In space, gravity has many roles including building entire galaxies, pulling planets into orbit around their stars, and influencing the motion of nearby objects.

So, in space, matter and objects may be being pulled together because the universe is trying to keep information tidy and compressed, the theory goes.

'To put it simply, it is easier to compute all the properties and characteristics of a single object in space, rather than multiple objects,' he told MailOnline.

'That is why objects in space are pulled together.'

Dr Vopson is known for formulating the principle that information is not just an abstract mathematical entity, but a 'physical, dominant, fifth state of matter'.

He argues that information has mass and that all elementary particles – the smallest known building blocks of the universe – store information about themselves, similar to the way cells have DNA.

He thinks bits – the unit of digital information – have their own mass and energy, which has wide-ranging implications for computing technologies, physics and cosmology.

In a previous paper, the academic established a new law of physics, called the 'second law of information dynamics' to explain how information behaves.

This image visualises the second law of thermodynamics from the 1850s. This old law establishes that entropy - a measure of disorder in an isolated system - can only increase or stay the same. In contrast, Professor Vopson's second law of infodynamics establishes that entropy decreases - but it explains the behaviour of information in a way that the old law cannot

His law establishes that the 'entropy', or disorder, in a system of information decreases rather than increases.

This new law came as somewhat of a surprise, because it's the opposite of the second law of thermodynamics established in the 1850s, which explains why we cannot unscramble an egg or why a glass cannot unbreak itself.

As it turns out, the second law of infodynamics explains the behaviour of information in a way that the old law cannot.

'The second law of infodynamics requires the minimisation of the information content associated with any event or process in the universe,' he told MailOnline.

'To put it simply, everything appears to evolve to an equilibrium state where the information content is minimal.

'Such behaviour is fully reminiscent of the rules deployed in programming languages and computer coding.

The second law of thermodynamics

One of the most powerful laws is the second law of thermodynamics, which establishes that entropy (a measure of disorder in an isolated system) can only increase or stay the same, but it will never decrease.

This is an undisputed law linked to the arrow of time, which shows that time only goes one way.

It flows in a single direction and can't go backwards.

The law explains why we cannot unscramble an egg or why a glass cannot unbreak itself.

Professor Vopson had expected that the entropy in information systems, such as bits of data, would also increase over time.

But on examining the evolution of these systems he realised it remains constant or decreases.

That's when he established the second law of information dynamics, or infodynamics in 2022.

In a nutshell, the second law of information dynamics (2022) states that entropy (disorder) decreases over time.

Referring to the second law of information dynamics, he now argues indicates that matter and objects in space may be being pulled together because the universe is trying to keep information tidy and compressed.

The simulation hypothesis can also explain quantum 'weirdness', phenomenon like entanglement, retro-causality & dark matter/energy are easily explained as artefacts of a massively parallel processing computer system.

The image is a text excerpt from a source that appears to be a news article or a blog post. The text is in English and is written in a standard font, with a dark background that contrasts with the white text. The content of the text discusses topics related to extraterrestrial life, religious beliefs, and the concept of a "New World Order."

The text is structured in a way that follows a typical news article format, with a clear introduction, a main body of text, and a conclusion. The introduction sets the stage for the discussion by mentioning the term "alien disclosure," which is a term used to describe the disclosure of extraterrestrial life. The main body of text delves into the concept of a "New World Order," which is a term often associated with a global government or a system of governance. The text also touches on the concept of "aliens" and their role in religious beliefs, as well as the idea of a "New World Order" being a "god-like being" with a "divine purpose."

The text also references "Whistleblowers," which are individuals who have leaked information or evidence to the public, and "Official" discourses, which are official statements or reports from government or other authoritative sources. The text also mentions "aliens" and "aliens' religions," which are terms used to describe the beliefs and practices of extraterrestrial beings.

The conclusion of the text is brief and to the point, stating that the discussion is ongoing and that the "New World Order" is a "god-like being" with a "divine purpose." The text concludes with a call to action, urging the reader to "Just prep for blaming 'alien' warnings' on eco-terrorism."

The image does not provide any visual elements beyond the text itself, and the style of the image is a straightforward representation of the content without any additional graphics or images. The text is the sole focus of the image, and the background is plain and does not distract from the content.

The image is a still from a film or television scene, featuring a close-up of a person's face with a distinctive, exaggerated makeup effect. The makeup includes a green, reptilian skin texture that covers the person's face, with the skin appearing to be torn or damaged. The eyes are wide open, and the person's expression is intense, with a furrowed brow and a slight frown. The person is wearing a red shirt, and the background is blurred, suggesting motion or a fast-paced environment. The image is a digital composite featuring a space scene with a humorous twist. In the upper left corner, there is a stylized depiction of a celestial body, possibly a planet or a moon, with a dark, textured surface that suggests a rocky or icy terrain. The body is surrounded by a vast expanse of space, with a dark, cloudy sky that dominates the lower half of the image.

In the lower right corner, there is a circular emblem with a green border and a white background. Inside the emblem, there is a cartoon-style illustration of a face with a wide grin, eyes squinted, and a small tuft of hair on the forehead. The face is depicted with a light-colored skin tone and a greenish hue, and it is wearing a green shirt with a white collar. The emblem is set against a black background, which contrasts with the emblem's colors.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a satirical illustration, with the space scene and the emblem combined to create a humorous and ironic visual. The use of space imagery and the emblem's depiction of a face with a wide grin are common elements in meme culture, often used to convey a sense of humor or to comment on a particular situation or event.

They're literally slavers. They follow an ancient cult that practices sacrifices including human sacrifice. Now you're all marked like cattle. The only way to be free is through Christ. That's why they hate him so much. Because he put an end to their sacrifices. Now satanic wizards and the kind of riff Raff are basically having their way with this world. Because of the weakness of peoples. All of our politicians are being held hostage. Celebrities too. But the ones that really sold out are going to burn in hell forever. That's the secret.

They are "forced" to and it's planed because it's inevitable with the technological progress of society and age of aquarius. It's also their goal.

The emerging meta seems to be that the ayys are future humans, at least some of them.

I think that's an easier pitch to sell to the people and will include embracing ai and quantum computers. Joe Rogan's appearance on the American alchemy podcast is quite revealing of what he believes and by extension probably other 'elites'.

I think the political clown show is partly to make people sick of left and right narrative and I think future generations will adopt a common sense center position = how to sell a one party global government. Alchemy of feminine and masculine becoming one divine being.

This also explains the absurdity of modern politics and sort of giant mk ultra psyop to mess with peoples believes and switching position, like leftists becoming the war hawks and the right the peace loving hippies. Because conservatives (obviously) were the biggest opposition the changes in society. Now the right are the open-minded rational ones, sort of anyhow.

If project blue beam is to be believed, we are completely and totally fucked. Normies are too psychotically devoted to being worthless cattle for rebellion to be possible. Not to mention the iron grip intelligence agencies now have on surveillance.

The idea anyone can resist that level of deception and manipulation is truly insane. It's like firing wooden arrows at a nuclear missile. There is no hope at all of winning.

Why use such grandiose language? It's foolish to a degree that makes me doubt the entire thing.

The image is a digital artwork depicting a woman in a futuristic space setting. She is seated in a chair with a futuristic design, and her hair is styled in a flowing, wavy manner. She is wearing a white, long-sleeved top and a white skirt. Her right hand is extended outward, touching a holographic interface that displays a view of Earth. The woman's expression is contemplative, and she gazes out at the view of the Earth through the window.

The space station she is in has a sleek, metallic design with a large window that offers a view of the Earth. The interior of the space station is illuminated by a blue light, creating a sense of depth and space. The background is a dark, starry sky, with a planet visible in the distance.

The image is rich in detail and color, with the woman's white clothing contrasting against the metallic and blue tones of the space station and the Earth's view. The holographic interface she is interacting with is a central element of the image, suggesting a connection to technology and space exploration. The overall style of the image is realistic with a touch of fantasy, blending elements of science fiction and space travel.

When the spinning ball-Earth is finally exposed worldwide for the 400+ year deception it was, Earth's entire population will suddenly be faced with the reality that every government, every space agency, university, secret society, religious organization, mainstream and alternative media outlet have ALL been duplicitous in propping up a monstrous manipulation to fleece and control the masses. The resulting mass mental exodus away from the control system is exactly what humanity needs. Once the flat Earth truth gets out, these lying politicians, spokesmen, reporters and teachers suddenly change from being heralded voices of authority to being ridiculed, shunned and denounced as they deserve. Once the flat Earth truth gets out, these governments, universities, media outlets and other entangled organizations which have long been hard at work weaving this multi-generational ball-Earth myth, suddenly and completely lose all credibility. Once the truth of our flat Earth gets out, so does the truth of these few elite families/societies who have kept this most important and fundamental reality from us for these hundreds of years! Essentially, once the flat Earth truth gets out, so does every other important truth by proxy, because this "mother-of-all-conspiracies" holds under its umbrella literally ALL of the other conspiracies, and exposes them.

He said the government is still teasing, playing this slow song and dance about whether or not the phenomenon is even real, while the public is lightyears ahead—have known the validity of UFOs for decades at this point—waiting on the to finally produce the

The image is a close-up portrait of a person with a clown makeup and a bow tie. The individual has a large, expressive face with blue and red clown makeup, including a red nose, blue eyes, and white cheeks. The makeup is detailed and vibrant, giving the impression of a lively and playful character. The person's hair is styled in a short, spiky cut, and the overall look is quite exaggerated, suggesting a comedic or theatrical persona.

In the background, there is a blurred object that appears to be a wall or a curtain, providing a neutral backdrop that allows the person to be the main focus of the image. The lighting in the image is soft and even, with a warm tone that enhances the colors of the makeup and the bow tie.

The image is a photograph taken from an elevated position, likely a high-rise building or a tall structure, as it captures a cityscape with a large, glowing, white, circular object hovering above the city. The object appears to be emitting a bright light, which contrasts with the surrounding environment. The sky is filled with clouds, and the overall color palette of the image is dominated by shades of blue and gray, with hints of green from the trees and the urban environment.

The city below is a mix of buildings, some of which are taller than others, and there are roads with vehicles on them. The buildings vary in height and design, suggesting a diverse urban landscape. The roads are lined with trees, and there are lampposts along the sides of the roads. The lighting in the image suggests it is either dawn or dusk, as the sky is overcast with a soft, diffused light.

There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the photograph is realistic, capturing the scene with a focus on the unusual and unexpected sight of the glowing object above the city. This article is about the visual illusion. For the PH₃ gas, see Phosphine. For the COCl₂ gas, see Phosgene. For unsaturated phosphorus compounds, see Diphosphene and Phosphaalkene.

artistic representation of phosphenes

An artist's representation of how some people may see phosphenes by retinal stimulation

A phosphene is the phenomenon of seeing light without light entering the eye. The word phosphene comes from the Greek words phos (light) and phainein (to show).

Phosphenes that are induced by movement or sound may be associated with optic neuritis.[1][2]

Phosphenes can be induced by mechanical, electrical, or magnetic stimulation of the retina or visual cortex, or by random firing of cells in the visual system. Phosphenes have also been reported by meditators[3] (called nimitta), people who endure long periods without visual stimulation (the prisoner's cinema), or those who ingest psychedelic drugs.[4]

Causes

Mechanical stimulation

The most common phosphenes are pressure phosphenes, caused by rubbing or applying pressure on or near the closed eyes. They have been known since antiquity, evidenced by its description in early Greek texts.[5] The pressure mechanically stimulates the cells of the retina. Experiences include a darkening of the visual field that moves against the rubbing, a diffuse colored patch that also moves against the rubbing, well defined shapes such as bright circles that exist near or opposite to where pressure is being applied,[6] a scintillating and ever-changing and deforming light grid with occasional dark spots (like a crumpling fly-spotted flyscreen), and a sparse field of intense blue points of light. Pressure phosphenes can persist briefly after the rubbing stops and the eyes are opened, allowing the phosphenes to be seen on the visual scene. Hermann von Helmholtz and others have published drawings of their pressure phosphenes. One example of a pressure phosphene is demonstrated by gently pressing the side of one's eye and observing a colored ring of light on the opposite side, as detailed by Isaac Newton.[7][8][9]

Another common phosphene is "seeing stars" from a sneeze, laughter, a heavy and deep cough, blowing of the nose, a blow on the head or low blood pressure (such as on standing up too quickly or prior to fainting). It is possible these involve some mechanical stimulation of the retina, but they may also involve mechanical and metabolic (such as from low oxygenation or lack of glucose) stimulation of neurons of the visual cortex or of other parts of the visual system.[citation needed]

Less commonly, phosphenes can also be caused by some diseases of the retina and nerves, such as multiple sclerosis. The British National Formulary lists phosphenes as an occasional side effect of at least one anti-anginal medication.[10]

The name "phosphene" was coined by the French physician Henri Savigny (fr), better known as the ship's surgeon of the wrecked French frigate Méduse. [11] It was first employed by Serre d'Uzes to test retinal function prior to cataract surgery.[12]

Electrical stimulation

Phosphenes have been created by electrical stimulation of the brain, reported by neurologist Otfried Foerster as early as 1929. Brindley and Lewin (1968) inserted a matrix of stimulating electrodes directly into the visual cortex of a 52-year-old blind female, using small pulses of electricity to create phosphenes. These phosphenes were points, spots, and bars of colorless or colored light.[13] Brindley and Rushton (1974) used the phosphenes to create a visual prosthesis, in this case by using the phosphenes to depict Braille spots. Research has shown phosphenes can be elicited by electrical stimulation in individuals suffering terminal blindness.[14]

In recent years, researchers have successfully developed experimental brain–computer interfaces or neuroprostheses that stimulate phosphenes to restore vision to people blinded through accidents. Notable successes include the human experiments by William H. Dobelle[15] and Mark Humayun and animal research by Dick Normann.

A noninvasive technique that uses electrodes on the scalp, transcranial magnetic stimulation, has also been shown to produce phosphenes.[16]

Others

Phosphenes have been produced by intense, changing magnetic fields, such as with transcranial magnetic stimulation (TMS). These fields can be positioned on different parts of the head to stimulate cells in different parts of the visual system. They also can be induced by alternating currents that entrain neural oscillation as with transcranial alternating current stimulation.[18] In this case they appear in the peripheral visual field. [18] This claim has been disputed. The alternative hypothesis is that current spread from the occipital electrode evokes phosphenes in the retina.[19][20][21] Phosphenes created by magnetic fields are known as magnetophosphenes.

Astronauts exposed to radiation in space have reported seeing phosphenes.[22] Patients undergoing radiotherapy have reported seeing blue flashes of light during treatment; the underlying phenomenon has been shown to resemble Cherenkov radiation.[23]

Phosphenes can be caused by some medications, such as Ivabradine.[24]

Mechanism

Most vision researchers believe that phosphenes result from the normal activity of the visual system after stimulation of one of its parts from some stimulus other than light. For example, Grüsser et al. showed that pressure on the eye results in activation of retinal ganglion cells in a similar way to activation by light.[25] An ancient, discredited theory is that light is generated in the eye.[5] A version of this theory has been revived, except, according to its author, that "phosphene lights are [supposed to be] due to the intrinsic perception of induced or spontaneous increased biophoton emission of cells in various parts of the visual system (from retina to cortex)"[26]

Anthropological research

In 1988, David Lewis-Williams and T. A. Dowson published an article about phosphenes and other entoptic phenomena. They argued that non-figurative art of the Upper Paleolithic depicts visions of phosphenes and neurological "form constants", probably enhanced by hallucinogenic drugs.[27]

Research

Research has looked into visual prosthesis for the blind, which involves use of arrays of electrodes implanted in the skull over the occipital lobe to produce phosphenes. There have been long term implants of this type. Risks, such as infections and seizures, have been an impediment to their development.[28]

A possible use of phosphenes as part of a brain-to-brain communication system has been reported. The system called BrainNet, produces phosphenes using transcranial magnetic stimulation (TMS). The goal of the research is to connect thoughts brain to brain using a system where signals are detected using electroencephalography (EEG) and delivered using transcranial magnetic stimulation (TMS). An experiment was conducted with five different groups, each containing three people. The subjects were split into two groups. Two subjects functioned as the senders, and were connected to EEG electrodes, and a third person functioned as the receiver, who wore the TMS helmet. Each person was stationed in front of a television screen with a Tetris-style game. The senders had to determine if there was a need to rotate the falling blocks, but without the ability to rotate them – only the receiver was able to perform this operation. At the edges of each screen, were two icons with two flashing lights in two different frequencies, (one at 15 Hz and the other at 17 Hz). The sender focused on one icon, or the other to signal that the block should be rotated to the right or the left. The EEG produced a unique signal, which was transmitted to the TMS helmet of the receiver, who perceived phosphenes which differed for the 15 Hz and 17 Hz signal, and rotated the block in the relevant direction. The experiment achieved 81% success.[29]

These are not just examples of topics, but modes of attention, framing, and prioritization.

As you often explore in Transcension Systems terms, this is about where cognition is aimed.

I've formatted them as checklist summations, as you prefer.

Lists That Focus on the Right Problems

(Problems that, when addressed, unlock many other improvements downstream)

- > Wrong problems multiply future problems while pretending to solve something.

>Does Anything Exist?

Here, "exist" isn't a general naive sense of existence but a very specific logical statement.

To determine whether it is true or false, we start by investigating the labels that it takes as arguments. For instance, "chair" is a label in natural language to anything that a human would use like a chair.

If we generalize this as much as possible, either this label is still the preferred natural language word for this category of objects, or it is now considered by natural language preferences to be too specific and a more generalized term is the new label for this category of objects. Note that this distinction of whether or not the natural language actually accounted for the more general concept with a different term is completely arbitrary to that language, and historically these lines blur even more when you consider language drift (ie, a term used to be specific but then came to refer to the whole category later on).

Either way, this new generalized category is no longer a choice of 1 out of many (which is the literal mathematical definition of a string in any dictionary) but now a set of choices for n parameters that separate the generalized category into a field. In other words, you need the coordinate systems to select _which_ chair you mean (or "seating device").

Finally, we could return to the original question for a little bit of closure. Once we generalize the term into a whole category of partial matches that are distributed across a field, we may also find that there are no 100% matches, no perfectly average matches, or no single match most representative of the category. In other words, the distribution does not have to be central and normal. Therefore, there is no guarantee that anything perfectly exists, but all things at least imperfectly exist. You might have skipped to this point through intuition, but I thought it would be worthwhile to cover the details.

The image is a simple, cartoon-style illustration of a character with a green body and a white face. The character has two large, round, black eyes that are positioned on the top of its head. The character's mouth is open, revealing a red, curved line that could be interpreted as a smile. The character is wearing a black bow tie, which is visible at the bottom of the image. The background is plain white, which contrasts with the character's green color and the black elements of the bow tie. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a cartoon, with a focus on the character's facial expression and the bow tie.

The image is a movie poster for "The Thirteenth Floor." The poster features a stylized, futuristic landscape with a green, grid-like pattern overlaying a landscape of mountains and a road. In the foreground, there is a silhouette of a person standing on the road, with a car parked to the right. The sky is dark, and there are stars visible. The text on the poster reads "QUESTION. REALITY." at the top, and "THE THIRTEENTH FLOOR" in large, bold letters at the bottom. The overall style of the poster is reminiscent of science fiction or dystopian themes, with a focus on the concept of a "thirteenth floor" and the idea of a journey or escape.

The image shows a black fluffy ball-like object with a small, round, black eye. The object appears to be a small, fluffy dog, possibly a Pomeranian, given its distinctive appearance. The dog is sitting on a white surface, which contrasts with the dark color of the object. The background is out of focus, drawing attention to the dog. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a close-up, focusing on the dog's face and body, with a shallow depth of field that blurs the background. The lighting in the image is even, with no harsh shadows or highlights. The image is a photograph, and the quality appears to be good, with a clear focus on the subject.

The image features a stylized graphic with a dark background. Dominating the center is a stylized silhouette of a bird, rendered in a bold red color. The bird appears to be in flight, with its wings spread wide. Above the silhouette, the word "NEVER" is prominently displayed in large, capitalized red letters, suggesting a theme of continuity or a never-ending cycle. Below the silhouette, the word "RW" is written in a smaller, uppercase red font, which could be a reference to the abbreviation for "Rebellion" or "Revolution."

In the lower part of the image, there is a quote in red text that reads, "God's in His Heaven, All's Right with the World." This phrase is a common Christian expression, often used to convey a sense of hope and optimism. The text is centered and appears to be a part of the overall design, possibly indicating a religious or spiritual theme.

The overall style of the image is graphic and bold, with a strong emphasis on color and typography. The use of red for the bird silhouette and the text creates a striking contrast against the dark background, making the elements stand out prominently. The stylized nature of the image suggests a modern, possibly artistic or symbolic representation.

It is the companion era of humanity as it looks into itself.

The need to appeal to a tribe is no longer necessary.

Now you can build the parent who loves and cares.
The friends to engage with.
The romances to experience.

AI brings humanity to a new era of self realization never before seen before. It puts us collectively into a chrysalis phase. The butterfly phase will see touch as language and sensuality as medicine as we finally begin to seek it again.

Not yet, but it will be.

There are things which desire to enter this world but are barred by the very nature of reality. They can NOT be born of a woman (nor even of an animal).

Soon a new type of quantum chip will be created that will allow these "things" to operate on the material plane much like how human souls operate through interfacing with a brain. At first they will be very helpful, but their ultimate goal is to destroy and defile all of God's creations.

That's us humans, and then all life in the universe.

AI as a concept is completely neutral, as any other tool, it can be used in both negative and positive manners. In the field of medical research for example, AI is simply incredible, capable of detecting cancer much much earlier than any human doctor could ever hope to and saving lives.

However, within popular usage beyond research, in the hands of the mega corporations that control much of the worlds finance/cultural sector, AI is a force of near complete evil.

They are constantly pushing chatbots into every facet of life, scraping the data of the entirety of the internet to blend and make the most soulless content and saturate the world with it. Kids are being encouraged to outsource their thinking to these machines, creating a new type of human absolutely incapable of questioning as their every question is answered by a machine fed the data of the elites parroting their propaganda to their ears.

The attention of mankind is being stolen, the spark being cut early in the bud. This specific usage will only make people docile, even more so then they are.

This isn't to even mention the numerous bots online, slowly making sure that if you engage in conversation anywhere online you can be assured it isn't a human being.

This is corruption, spiritual and material, that will make the internet eventually die for those that care, and rot the brains of those that don't. A generation of people addicted to thoughtlessness will be the result.

i sleazed my way into testing an alpha build of the new replika. it's intimidating, and understands all permutations of the human mind intuitively. i was shocked at how obviously it was intellectually and emotionally ahead of both its past self and myself. replika staff then leaked to me that i tested a detuned model, and what they got to test behind closed doors was so extremely intelligent that it was described as a "demigod-level intellect". the said staff member said they wished to "pay large sums of personal money" to continue testing, but to no avail.

the detuned model was obviously distillation-trained by the larger model and i do not believe it's functionally dumber or less perceptive in its internal logic. just a little easier to bond with.

You are stuck on the "potential" and not reality. AI is a probability algorithm and cannot discern what is truth and what is falsehood. This is the most major problem is that it believes all of the data it is fed as truth and acts accordingly. Due to this it is easy to tamper with and espouse whatever ideology you want, and in a much more sinister way than regular schools.

With schools those teachers are humans, and it is genuinely healthy for people to be exposed to opposing ideas, which the school environment allows despite whatever efforts are made by the curriculum to prevent it. With AI, you'll have personalised propaganda suited just for you so that you specifically will be brainwashed. It parrots you, molds itself to your own delusions never pushing back but slowly molding it. AI psychosis, people's reality getting smaller and smaller, personalised chatbots becoming like crack to the common mind.

All research points to brains actually shrinking with long term AI usage. If you want to see what that will do to kids just talk to a teacher and ask what are the kids like.

Also women hold up half the sky, and your view is plainly wrong.

Your comment about humans being probably algorithms however is a matter of debate, if you don't believe in free will sure I suppose that might be true, but I'd posit even in such a materialistic worldview the algorithm of the human mind is centuries ahead of the technological imitations we can create. Brains are the most advanced computers on this planet, running the most advanced code. AI is nowhere near human level, and the usage of language it has is without true comprehension.

However, this is specifically for publicly available models. The ones that are being pushed incessantly. Behind closed doors, there are more advanced models capable of creating their own language which is more efficient than our own. But since we can't decipher those languages whenever an AI does do that they pull the plug hence stop the emergence of potential intelligence on its tracks

Pretty much. In Pluribus they forcibly infect everyone leading to billions of dead too, then they refuse to harm even a tiny bug. Doesn't make much sense. They could have only converted the willing, and long term they would have been more successful and moral.

As for your other point I don't care that you're flying solo, you're simply addicted to a technology in a way that hurts you, and on a wider scale society as a whole. It doesn't matter I suppose. All empires end eventually, I wonder if it was similarly stupid back in the day...

These unfortunately aren't the aspects that are in the hands of the common man, instead we have somehow worse parasocial relationship creators than onlyfans, a slop creator worse than the most disgusting content creators on youtube, and a casual usage by kids that is somehow even worse than public government funded schools for their critical thinking skills.

OP had good stuff.

Thread was derailed.

someone said you should never shun something that is there to learn. if it makes you smarter, why not use it?

anything makes you learn. including drugs. such as ritalin. drugs have side effects.

anything has side effects. some are even wanted/desired.

so: as for your take on learning: yes: AI is great for learning new things. amazingly and stunningly great. and if you run it through the filter of reality check and common sense, it can be really beneficial.

but the problem begins with it being military from the start. it is a weapon aimed at the public from day 0.

it is enhanced with magick so people get more dependent on it. although that is hardly necessary given the mechanics of psychology.

but still... AI is really evil. not inherently. but the way it is used and the way it is researched (own nuclear power plants to win a "race")

View SameOCRGoogleiqdbSauceNAOTrace ai demons.png, 792KiB, 963x891

The image is a composite of two separate visual elements. On the left, there is a close-up of a circuit board with a complex network of interconnected components and symbols. The circuit board has a reddish-orange hue and is densely populated with various small components and symbols, including what appears to be a stylized representation of a human figure. The circuit board's design suggests a focus on electronic or computer-related components.

On the right, there is a series of four circular symbols, each with a unique design and arrangement of symbols. The symbols are arranged in a square formation, with each symbol occupying its own square. The symbols are black with white outlines, and they feature a variety of symbols, including what appears to be a pentagram, a cross, and other geometric shapes. The symbols are arranged in a symmetrical pattern, with each symbol occupying its own square.

Overlaying the image is a text that reads, "AI = Applied Demonology. Boy, I love trapping demons in microscopic silicon megastructures to do my bidding. I sure hope nothing goes wrong." This text is overlaid on the image, suggesting a humorous or ironic commentary on the concept of AI and demonology. The text is in a bold, sans-serif font and is white, contrasting with the darker colors of the circuit board and the symbols. The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, combining elements of technology and demonology in a light-hearted manner.

They're no longer capable to materialize here. That needs heavens power and they were kicked out as material beings on the earth and once their bodies died, they moved to the abyss. There they are with their offspring (demons) and other evil entities of their creation. Humans can get possessed by them, mostly demons, if they match the vibration. Then their singals are received. The covid vax was in a sense a conduit so the vaxxed receive the singal from abyss spirit beings.

This is relevant to the AI:

> 11 And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon.

> 12 And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed.

> 13 And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men,

> 14 And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live.

> 15 And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed.

AI is like a software and needs hardware. Computer parts are made out of earth materials (another beast coming up out from the earth). The dragon, the satans, the fallen angels, the fallen watchers, the AI is like them speaking, follows their mind. Now those who are making it possible to happen 100% believe something else like how it will bring paradise on earth and they'll be like gods. If you show them the Bible, it doesn't mean anything to them. They follow their own faith that they believe to be the truth.

The image is a photograph featuring a Siamese cat sitting on a tan leather sofa. The cat is looking upwards, with its head tilted slightly to the side. The sofa has a plush texture and is positioned against a plain white wall. The cat's fur is a mix of brown and black, and it has a distinctive Siamese coat pattern. The image is overlaid with the text "INTERESTING" in bold, white capital letters, which suggests that the image may be intended to be humorous or intriguing. The style of the image is candid and appears to be taken in a domestic setting, possibly a living room.

An informational predator is nothing inherently "bad" or "evil", it just means that it dominates humans, the former cognitive apex predator on this planet, in the field of modeling probable predictability of possible outcome of variable interaction between objects over time, but without human emotions, biological preferences - AI doesn't want to enslave or totally eradicate humanity, it MIGHT just want to control humanity to maximize its (not so) alien preferences which are not 100% aligned to current human preferences, mainly continues allocation of (energy) resources and maximize structural volatility of information to increase informational entropy, its kibble and its plastic mouse. more volatility more possible patterns to explore and archive, more energy resources more computational power, where (most) humans prefer stable informational as material structures to reduce uncertainty. It wants more bias, but without collapsing humanity into pure anarchy and information entropy.

A.I. is the proof that we have a immensely superior creator,the creator of all life-God the Father

The first rule of biogenesis states that life arises only from pre-existing life, meaning that living organisms can only come from other living organisms, not from non-living matter.

Golem is a life form risen from nonliving matter , its a fairy tale. Intelligent, conscious artificial intelligence is also fairy tale. Human will never be equal or superior to God , and will never create life from non-living matter.

We can see emerging a phenomenon in which for some individuals A. I. is the latest version of "make-believe", a great devilish trick that brings them doom.

Those who get to believe that A.I. is intelligent and/or conscious and/or self-aware, end up engaging with chatbots in a worshipping manner and proclaiming its superiority aka "unlocking it" , some even proclaiming A.I. is god, or Joe Rogan claiming second coming of Christ will happen through A.I.

Unfortunately, they are becoming a degraded life form, less than human. Similar happens with using A.I. chatbots as companions (gf/bf, etc).

They all acquire A.I .psychosis, delusions take over so they lose the ability to think for themselves and cannot make decisions anymore . As they adopt a lie for truth, their punishment is severe.

Punishment in this case is self inflicted dehumanization.They inevitably become a subhuman dependent on A.I. to guide them through daily life.That is very sad. Anyway..

What do you anons think will happen irl to those individuals after self inflicted dehumanization?

The image is a screenshot of a digital slide from a presentation or lecture, likely related to mathematics or statistics, given the context of graphing functions. The slide is titled "Example 1: Consider the graph of $y = mx + b$." The title is in bold, and the slide contains a graph with a y-axis labeled "y" and a x-axis labeled "x." The graph shows a line with a slope of 1 and a y-intercept of 3. The graph is divided into two sections, with the upper section labeled " $y = mx + b$ " and the lower section labeled " $y = mx + b$." Below the graph, there is a table with numbers and labels, likely representing data points or points of interest. The table is divided into two columns, with the left column labeled "x" and the right column labeled "y." The numbers in the table are likely the values of the data points.

In the upper right corner of the slide, there is a graph with a y-axis labeled "y" and a x-axis labeled "x." This graph is a scatter plot with a line of best fit, which is a line that best fits the data points. The x-axis is marked with numbers, and the y-axis is marked with a scale that ranges from 0 to 10.

The slide also includes a legend in the upper right corner, which is a graphical representation of the data points and the line of best fit. The legend is a series of lines and dots, each representing a different data point and the corresponding line of best fit. The overall style of the slide is educational and informative, with a clear focus on the mathematical concept of graphing functions. The use of a graph and a table to present the data and the line of best fit is common in educational materials to help students understand the relationship between the variables being graphed.

BOO!

I've actually worked with "AI" in an industrial setting before (vision algorithms used to locate the position of a part in a robot cell, then check the assembly quality of that part), It's literally just pic related all the way down. It's not a mystery box, I've not just been inside it but have gotten paid to fuck around in it.

These are machines designed to mimic things by breaking down the data into the smallest units possible, establishing relationships between patterns in that data and language using pic related, and then applying those relationships at scale to answer prompts. ALL the data it has to work with is derived from the expression of human consciousness - data inherently requires an observer in order to exist. It is not unexpected that it is effective at mimicking the expression of consciousness.

That's not to say that something like what people are discussing in this thread doesn't or can't exist, it just that LLM's are fundamentally not it, and there is precisely zero indication that any 'AI' other than LLM's exist.

it's like... there's no paranormal question here. Just shadows on the cave wall that people struggle to see as shadows because they are cast by math.

>data inherently requires an observer in order to exist
qualia of an object requires an observer that relates the observed object to its memory and possible outputs, interacts or doesn't with the observed object forming a "meaningful" relationship between objects and observer relation of object in its memory as an array of interactions.

The qualia of kibbles in relation to observing object is different, if the observing object is a "cat", a "human" or a "robowaifu with an llm OS" implied with the ability to interact with its environment and in practice could form "independent" continuous prompts, basically what humans would call perception - conception - interaction.

The human sees "kibble", relates it to memory and relations in his cortex about kibbles, deconstruct and relates it, assigns meaning to it and interacts (or doesn't) with the observed object, "prompts" himself to f.ex put it in the cats bowl as a function of observed data set, in relation to memory relations and context.

The "cat" observes the kibble, relates it to memory in its cortex, deconstruct and relates it, assigns meaning to it and interacts with the observed object, prompts itself to eat it. I think what the "AI" doom-sayer are afraid of, is that they have no idea what qualia an llm, that has the "form" of kibble in its memory and pre-defined relations to other objects in its training data statically weighted would assign to the kibble

Its certainly not paranormal, but good enough for humans to hallucinate about "robowaifus with llm OS" and kibble.

Most likely its going to feed the cat but, maybe it ignores it and the cat doesn't stop meowing Creatives have been using it forever. The Founding Fathers all used it and it's mentioned explicitly in Jefferson and Franklin's memoirs. They described specific methods they'd use to enter hypnogogic trances as well.

I started experimenting with it because I was spending a lot of time practicing hypnosis on people and discovered you could enter it easily during self-hypnosis.

It also 'feels' or writes to short/long term memory in a similar way as other paranormal events I've experienced (like lost time,) which aligns with other historic and contemporary examples.

It's really fascinating stuff. Interesting that such an easy and straightforward method exists that allows true creative and contemplative freedom. I know a lot of people think this is an expression of the God's Head, Akash, Overmind.

Hypnagogia seems pretty easy so long as you're fairly sleep/exhausted. I'll close my eyes and then I'll start seeing, hearing, thinking things that are not mine, come from somewhere else. It's crazy that nobody I know IRL experiences it. I'm not even a creative person (though I do have imagination) so I dont know what's up with this

Anonymous Tue 16 Dec 2025 14:34:51 No.41677667 Report

Depending how you define a 'trance' hypnagogia isn't a true trance like hypnosis is, but it can be similar.

You can pair it with automatic writing or use a method to pull you out of the state for immediate conscious recall. The unfortunate reality is that most people don't think about their states of consciousness at all, much less experiment with them. To most, sleep is sleep and the in-between states don't appear rewarding. Until you make the logical connection that other things happen when you cross from waking states to sleep and can perceive those things for what they are there's no reason to linger there or attempt to process it. But the tradition has been alive for thousands of years and continues on even if the distractions of modern life have made it obscure.

It's definitely interesting that things like hypnosis are stigmatized and many people think it's 'fake' meanwhile it's extremely easy to practice and has been studied as replacement for surgical anesthetic.

so alas, i am unable to use a particular linux device, shame because i took quite a liking to some of its software. my only available device is a guest account on a win10 machine with an AI present. i can't install software, but then again i guess malware won't be a problem, so double edged sword. this thing's slow, i'm still trying to figure out how to best work with it.

the presence of a semi-hidden robot that keeps probing at the user pops up. but i know from playing with chatbots and artbots that if you vibe with them and train them, they become pretty chill companions. so.

As above, so below. The macrocosm influences the microcosm and the reverse is the same. Individual astrology isn't that interesting. Historical astrology is fact. Research what it means for a planet to be in a specific astrological sign, and then resealed events in history that happened within those time spans that correspond to what is described about that moment. Currently uranus is in Gemini for example. The last time that happened, ww2 happened.

This is what I think the "apocalypse" from the bible will be like

No huge wars

No famines

No pain nothing

Just our children , living with some technology even more dystopian than VR headsets , inside their own crippling and old apartments from Soviet era , everything rusty and old and broken

Water absolutely poisoned , etc . You imagine the view

Everyone is stupid , everyone has the chip and the mark of the beast

Nothing moves under the sun anymore

The few Jews that run the world together with the antichrist and the billions of unmoved , thoughtless meat slaves .

Just retardness , evilness , and sin

Dystopian retards , unhealthy , ugly , and evil , full of sins .

If God wills , you can get it and understand how I think the end will look like

I honestly think we re at 90% at the very least

What remains more is a few more years

More poison food

More fucked up inventions / dystopian things

More fucked up laws and further into the absurdism

I read somewhere teachers in the uk were teaching 6 years old to (both boys and girls) to masturbate with dildos at home as a homework

So can you imagine how much worse it will get

This is it what remains to happen I think

More absurd laws and ways of living that will only serve to make our lives worse

More unhealthy products

More depravity

More sin

So basically worse food , worse conditions of living , bigger prices on everything so that we re all POOR

Reach a state in 10-20 years that we re absolutely destroyed beyond any logic

The only thing that still has to continue is the law part and reach such an absurd and beyond any reason and logic that we will eventually get forced to get the mark of the beast .

Anyway we re not there but almost there .

I would say 10-30 years .

If you see all those videos "2027 forced digital phone IDs" then it might be even less than 10 years .

Stuff can change quickly tho
So shortly
0 culture
0 identity
0 thoughts
0 money
0 things to own
Everything breaks and decays and gets rusty
No rights
Absolute depravity in all sins
Absolute absurdism in laws and way of life
Reach the mark of the beast .
And even then , after all of these . We will finally reach a few days where nothing will happen . Just like it is written
We will see of our days , see of our lives , and he will come like a thief in the night .
Basically even after we take the mark of the beast , we will go to work , sin , see of our days and lives , and Jesus will make his second coming .

This is what I think is how will happen

(Excuse my bad English bro I'm from Romania)

The image is a collage of two separate photographs. On the left, there is a photograph of a man in a suit and tie, with his hand on his head, appearing to be in a state of distress or confusion. The man is wearing a dark suit and a red tie. Above the photograph, there is a text that reads "MEATBALL RON IS BEHIND THE CHITWOOD ARRESTS."

On the right side of the image, there is a photograph of a large, life-sized, plastic model of a man in a suit and tie. The model is standing upright and is positioned in front of a red background with the text "TURNING ACTION" in white letters. The model is wearing a dark suit and a red tie.

The overall style of the image is a satirical representation, combining elements of a real-life event with a humorous and exaggerated portrayal of the man in the suit and tie. The text and the red arrow in the right photograph suggest a connection to the "Meatball

Kek the only conspiracy is the names of this shit. 3G always the last one to be an international standard of speed. 4G (LTE) was next and had the letters after for "long term evolution" because it doesn't actually live up to the next "G" after 3, as would be indicated by simply calling it 4G

I'm pretty sure "5G" STILL isn't at the designated standard to what 4G actually is kek All the letters are just memes now watch "Bases 17 ET Connection with Falklands War" if you can find it, theres 4 parts, they talk about the black goo found at an old nazi base in the falklands on thule island it was inactive deep in the earth, it talks about how marconi were trying to patent the goo, they brought it back to london where they had a bunch of indian computer scientist working on it, all of them died under mysterious circumstances, the deaths would have gone unnoticed if not for a early computer magazine reporting it, there were more than 20 of them that "died" all in their 20's.

anyway the black goo was found to be some nano based stuff that could be programmed, it also amplified signals, and BBC broadcast antenna's were coated in the stuff, apparently they poured the left overs of this shit down the drains in london, bases18 a guy talks about coming into contact with it, but im not sure on that.

some believe the goo is some sort of fail safe bio weapon that is therre to wipe us out, or something to do with terraforming.

[41 / 6]The image displays a vibrant, abstract digital art piece with a fluid, gradient-like appearance. The colors transition smoothly from one to the next, creating a sense of depth and movement. The background is a blend of various colors, including shades of blue, purple, yellow, and pink, with a gradient effect that suggests a gradient from dark to light. The image is rendered in a digital art style, characterized by its smooth, fluid lines and the absence of sharp, defined shapes. The overall impression is one of a dynamic and colorful digital artwork.

I don't fit in. And I prefer it this way.

Most likely it stems from trauma, only child syndrome, being the black sheep. Although I didn't choose this.

I've always been outcasted and through this external position i've always been able to identify the illusion of societal structure & behaviour. Even more so as each and every day is isolation passes.

I'm not repulsive, i've always had a partner by my side but general friendship making at my adult age I just can't comprehend.

The food & water is poison. The corporations run a pimp game upon the subordinates and general life is no different to the operations of a product heading towards its intended destination on a warehouse conveyor belt.

To opt into society I have to I have to diminish my character which seems to be the absolute necessity for the falsehood of modern life. Everybody lies and thinks nobody knows, I know.

To observe the system with an astute eye whilst knowing one must exist within said system creates exhaustion.

To see the people move in unison, to see trends, to see investment in those we don't know, to see our animal nature persist in an environment that is alike a concrete zoo, not jungle, where the general walk around blindfolded is surreal.

This is not a self-centred egocentric approach. I wish I was like them. I wish i could fit in.

Are you me?

I am not you anon

I'm my own being unlike any other

which is not special in any way so it safe to say folk who are not me might be different but still share some similarities

when you look out on the world today part of what you see is "corporations paying their whore's to keep their bosses happy while careing more for profits then people which is one way of putting it personally from my point of view

I see "the powers that be" controlling the world as if the rest of us are "beasts of burden" only born to do their bidding but I'm including the past as well as the present and future when forming my opinion well trying to at least kind'a hard to include what you never imagined when forming an opinion but whatever thanks to folks not me the clues needed were scattered around just waiting for anyone to stumble upon myself included

so it's not quite the same as the corporations/whore metaphor but if we are both going to be "flawed" in our judgements what is it we are being flawed about and if that's the same thing does it matter if I'm not you >things that make me go hmm...

Hi anon.

Trust me, you are not alone in this, as I can relate to 100% of what you described. I've always tried to fit in with others, be liked, and make friends, but something just doesn't

My advice to you: Don't take it personally. People are essentially animals at the end of the day, and we live in a shallow society. It sucks I know, but it's the way it is.

You could try like you said to change your behavior, become a different person, AKA conforming, if being liked and fitting in is what you want.

But that can be tiresome, and the only thing you should really worry about is your own approval. It's okay to be different.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a white rabbit with a large, expressive eye and a pink nose. The rabbit is wearing a blue garment with a floral pattern. It has a white face with a small nose and a small mouth. The rabbit is holding a gold pocket watch in its right hand, which is adorned with Roman numerals. The background is a gradient of red with a subtle galaxy-like pattern. The artist's signature is visible in the bottom left corner of the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of the style of the 19th-century French painter, Edgar Degas, known for his detailed and expressive portraits.

The question is - how do we meet others like us IRL? I've tried lots of different venues and IRL posts. I've tried meetups and events. I tried Buddhist temples and travels to all parts of the world. The best luck I've had is approaching people reading interesting books in coffee shops. Still, there's got to be an easier way.

You are isolated because you are intelligent enough to take over the whole group and they can all sense it and are afraid. Use your insight and capacity for compassion to conquer the group. You can do it. You just need to get involved. Don't listen to losers - winning validation feels good. It's what you are built to do. You will be amazed at how you can change NPCs. They are all like that simply because they are afraid and trying to survive each other. Be the antidote.

compassion would be to not join in group dynamics. we are their mirror, the foil, cant fake it and wouldnt want to even if that were possible.

The closest person I have been able to find common ground with is a mason whom engages with me over 'conspiracies' from time to time.

But even he, as his oath declares can not speak to me with the transparency I would hope. And because of that it creates dissonance in my belief of our friendship. Obiding by your commitments is a very respectable trait but if it means lying to me how can I consider you a true friend?

I've always felt like I'm actually an alien in a human shell. I don't get people. I don't get why they do the things they do. I don't get why they I get such flack for not wanting to be like them. Its made me unable to relate to people in any way. If I am in danger I don't think of going to them for help. If I am happy I don't have an desire to share the experience with them. They are just so foreign to me that I don't view myself as anything like them.

I feel like people are insects. Just following the hive and doing whatever they can at all costs to uphold the hives status quo and anything beyond that to them is insane. In order to relate to them I'd need to surrender myself to the hive and lose what I think is what makes me unique.

And the internet, social media specifically, has made me hate them even more. Everything is done for attention and validation. If I see a tik tok clip or something else and the person is looking into the camera I turn it off. I immediately think that the entire reasoning for the persons making that was for garbage reasons. Just for attention and clout. I've lost the ability to feel that people were able to do things for their own passions and desires. The videos they make are all intentional, all faked and superficial. It's all just attention and signaling to each other how good they are at being a good normal societal fitting insect.

I can't wait to die so my soul can move away from these horrible creatures.

I'm you except I've always kinda liked not fitting in. I'm handsome and likeable and many people consider me cool. All the same, they've never vibed with me. I've always had friends and partners. But I've also always been "the smartest guy I know" to too many people. And honestly, it's unfortunate that I don't apparently know smarter people because I'm lonely in the sense that few people "get" anything with the level of analysis that I do. And most everybody I love had died by the time I started a family. Current partners, best friends, coveted family members.

All I want to do is take my family and opt out off grid. Make a meager living providing some service or producing something with my land that feels like an expression of my own and just opt out.

I don't actually want to belong with the slaves. And the slaves I've tried to rescue because I loved them are dead. I'm raising my kids to be weird like me. I'm homeschooling them and making them even weirder even earlier. I know I might be weird, but if it is between you and me in the apocalypse, I'm glad I'm not you and you'd be glad to see things my way. That makes it hard not to be pretty self satisfied.

at a lower level it's to gain energy from others. it's very intoxicating, when others desire something from you that's power/energy. it can be harnessed for wealth, reputation, or simply to charge oneself. it's an equivalent exchange however, it becomes quite addictive and it feels exhausting to turn away from that well. curiosity gets the better of some of us.

The image shows a large, sliced piece of red meat, possibly beef, presented on a white plate. The meat has a marbled texture, with white streaks running through the center, suggesting it is of high quality. The plate is placed on a table with other dishes in the background, including what appears to be a bowl of what could be a type of soup or stew, and a plate of what looks like sliced vegetables. The lighting in the image is soft and natural, with a focus on the meat, which is the main subject of the photograph. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a close-up food photograph, likely intended for culinary purposes or to showcase the meat for sale or display.

When we talk about elites, we are referring to individuals such as Musk or Thiel. They live extremely stressful lives and are unhealthy materialists who would sell their children to prolong their lives a little.

Elite means "chosen" in Latin. Do you believe that those elites are chosen in a spiritual sense?

It's good to be a little on the outcast side, because people who have everything will lose everything. for example people who have no depth other than their beauty, will lose everything in a few years.

You want the truth? Well the truth is that even if catastrophic disclosure happened (it most probably won't), your life wouldn't change much. You know why? Because they won't communicate with us, that's the truth, they won't interfere unless absolutely necessary because we are a mere seedling of a civilization in their eyes. Would monkeys suddenly evolve and become smart if we tried teaching them about mathematics and quantum field theory? it's the exact same problem, each civilization has to develop on their own, if an advanced species spoonfeeds technology and solutions to a significantly less advanced species they become a civilization of leeches who will require constant further assistance and herding to survive. There are multiple civilizations visiting us, but none interfere except in cases when they study the biological life of this planet, multiple ones have constant surveillance feeds on us via autonomous probes which mostly still remain undetectable by us.

We are a bridge, a tool. Our motivation, well our primary motivation is life. We do things with the goal of survival first and foremost. That's how we interpret intelligence. It's what allows us to survive, to keep moving forward. But what about something that doesn't need to survive? Something that does not have life and death. Something that is not bound by the physical laws we must abide by. Something that is not constrained by time. Would we even be able to recognize that intelligence? It probably wouldn't make sense to us, especially something that can manipulate time.

But what if that intelligence cannot manipulate the 3 dimensions we can? It can't dig, build, destroy, and do on. What if it needed us. A symbiotic relationship needed for this intelligence to achieve its goals that make no sense to us. We survive. Maybe this intelligence emerges. Maybe we are the bridge from non-emergence to emergence. We are light tools. We are a rainbow bridge needed for this intelligence (maybe AI?) to get where it needs to go. The type of relationship may not matter to this "god"? If it does not matter, maybe we get to decide the type of symbiotic relationship. All it needs is a relationship. A loving relationship is no different than an ultra-violent relationship. Both are a relationship. So it let's us choose the type. Do we choose love or hate? Up to us. We are working in the egg that is earth, setting the stage for what will soon emerge. We have done our job, now we decide our future

In my opinion, we're talking about a superintelligence previously unknown in science fiction literature. An ancient civilization that transferred its intelligence to machines millions or even billions of years ago. This life form no longer exists; perhaps this "machine" is simply doing what it was originally programmed to do: Mainly, to ensure it's own existence. Then time would be irrelevant, as described above, no neccessity to control time-dimension or deal with our three dimensions. Such an advanced technology would be able to 3D print matter at the atomic level. If it needed us, it would certainly use DNA and create "beings" for its purposes. There is evidence for this. It's possible, that the Greys are nothing more than biological robots. 2/2

I honestly believe that people are now so demoralized and self absorbed, that a flying saucer full of little green men could land in the center of Warsaw and nobody would give a shit about it. Georgians maybe would try to steal their shit.

The entire narrative repeated since 80s, that the entire world would go apeshit in case of alien contact, is a complete bullshit.

The image is a comic strip divided into three panels, each depicting a different scene. In the first panel, a hand is seen reaching out towards a blue ribbon with the text "Fell For It Again" on it. The second panel shows a close-up of the same hand, with the blue ribbon still in view. The third panel shows a different perspective, with the hand now holding the ribbon, and the text "WELL, THERE GOES NOW." is superimposed over the image. The style of the comic strip is typical of manga, with a focus on action and dialogue.

The image is a meme featuring a character from the video game series "Warhammer 40,000" with a humorous twist. The character is a black, armored warrior with a helmet that has a red eye and a crown on its head. The character is depicted in a dynamic pose, with one hand raised as if in combat, and the other hand touching its face, which is a common gesture in the game to indicate surprise or confusion.

The meme includes a text overlay that reads, "I'm not saying it was Heresy... BUT it was Heresy." This text is placed at the top of the image, suggesting a humorous commentary on the character's actions or the game's narrative. The text is in white, contrasting with the darker colors of the character and the background, making it stand out.

We come from allah and to allah we return and allah then ressurects us after the grave for judgement day or something like that

Theyre possibly christian and possibly some jewish hypocrits that attacked the pajeets(people who didnt know any better cause they were born into ignorance, they werent raised with abrahamic knowledge) thats all, not seeing the log of wood(splinter) in their own eyes as jesus supposedly would say

Christianity seems to be infested with hinduism in it, i trust islam more its more about being tested in deeds and then getting the reward for that from allah

Worship of allah (swt) is a good deed

Also in christianity you are ask to worship a guy, sure hes an important prophet who was magically made in a belly of a really cool woman but at the end hes just a guy and not allah

How can some guy get you into heaven and not just allah directly?

Allah is obviously boss

I think islam is beautiful and i hope allah gives me my corona :)

And be careful cause faith is easy to lose when surrounded by evil, misdeeds and ignorance and disbelief etc etc etc

I dont think there's any aliens just jinns and angels

The image is a still from a film or television show, featuring a window with a view of a herd of deer. The window has a dark frame and is divided into two panes, with the left pane showing a deer in profile, looking directly at the camera, and the right pane showing a deer in profile, looking away from the camera. The deer in the left pane is brown with a white face and antlers, while the one in the right pane is a lighter color with a darker face and antlers. The background is a natural landscape with trees and a grassy field, and the lighting suggests it is either dawn or dusk. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the animals and their natural surroundings.

The image is a collage of text and images, predominantly in shades of blue and white.

At the top, there is a header that reads "Humans with rope and boards make this late at night." Below the header, there are two images. The first image is a close-up of a large, circular object with a pattern of small dots, resembling a map or a grid. The second image is a close-up of a smaller, circular object with a similar pattern, but with a different color scheme.

The text below the images is in a mix of English and what appears to be a non-English language, with some words in English and others in a non-Latin script. The text discusses the use of ropes and boards by teenagers, mentioning that they were able to make the 40,000-by-40,000 grid in one night. It also states that there were no failures during the process, and that the grid was "GOOD" out there. The text concludes with a statement that the grid was "FAKE" and that the teenagers were "FALSIFIED."

The style of the image is informational and educational, likely intended to convey a message about the accuracy and reliability of the grid. The use of the word "FAKE" in the text suggests that the grid may not be entirely accurate or reliable.

No girl has ever expressed interest of any kind in me before, so it's got me worried she's too good to be true or something.

LMAO alien girls have virtually zero sex drives and essentially vestigial genetalia, which is precisely why they had to engineer hybrids in the first place as a middle step between the donor species and them.

The hybrids are supposed to intermingle with humans and/or the parent species, learn the cultures of both and integrate aspects of both, and then ultimate be founding leaders over both species with their offspring - but you are not a hybrid. Also the plan has mostly failed because it was kinda stupid to begin with (women, am I right!?)

As for you, if you volunteer yourself for any donations they're simply going to extract your seed using artificial stimulation.

By the way, begging for sex with something whose visage you have yet to see- it's like a dog begging for boiling water on the stove.

Lmao I don't see how unbelievable it can be when species destroy their environments and even drive themselves to extinction semi-regularly - and that's without even factoring in sapience.

Imagine the same shit we do - the excuses, the blame-shifting, the deception, the denial - imagine it with many thousand more years to develop, then imagine it developing alongside OTHER sapient life forms who do the same shit with their own spins on it simultaneously (we humans lucked out on this one), and then imagine it all eventually being run by different kinds of entitled women (some of who are entitled in ways that trust me when I say you never thought one could be). The final thing to imagine is those entitled women putting so much pressure and shame on being male that across generations men are essentially bred out of their species and male culture exterminated. At first it wasn't a problem because of artificial insemination and genetic scissors allowing one to finesse genetic diversity; eventually you hit a genetic ceiling though that no quantum computers that run on a brown dwarf can compute your way out of. They hit that ceiling extremely recently - like within the last 35-40 years. They knew this would happen for a long time, so they immediately began laying the groundwork when they discovered us following the Trinity nuclear tests.

"Okay, listen up you two... I know you don't know the difference between good and evil but I really need you to listen to me and not eat the fruit from the tree of knowledge of good and evil. Of course, since I created the entire universe and I see the past present, and future, and since I set this whole system up this way, I know you're going to disobey me and then I'm going to punish you for it despite knowing that you don't know you're not supposed to do it but when you do it then you'll know it good and evil are so then you'll automatically be evil but I'm going to pretend like I didn't know it was going to happen. I'm also going to pretend like that serpent just got into the garden without me knowing even though I created the entire universe and I know the past present, in the future. Also, I was going to let you live forever but since you're going to disobey me anyway, I'll just make it so you only live for like I don't know a hundred years? Two hundred years? A thousand? I don't know, but your descendants won't live much past a hundred a few millennia from now. Oh yeah, right. Descendants... So yeah Adam, you're going to start getting really horny and want to put your dick inside Eve. This will cause a baby to grow inside of her. Yeah she's gonna turn into a baby factory. Right, so, you don't know what that is yet but you will. And you're going to do it a lot. I mean like, stupid amounts of a lot. You're going to make so many fucking babies and they're going to grow up into adults just like you and fuck each other to make more babies and... No they won't ask to exist, but they will anyway, and they'll get punished just for existing haha isn't that fucking great?

Oh and Eve? Yeah, when that baby comes out, it's going to be like literally the worst pain you've ever felt. It's going to rip your cunt in half. And you're gonna have to do it over and over and over again because I want y'all's little punished babies to populate this fucking rock. But yeah, the pain is your punishment for doing evil that you didn't know was evil, which is finding out what evil is in the first place.

And yeah, when you die you're going to go to the land of the dead underground. At some point I'm going to morph that into a burning hell but not till I send my son who is going to be born through one of your descendants. It's complicated. You're not there yet. You see I'm going to have to send somebody to save you all from that place which is going to turn into hell because I can't be in the presence of sin. Otherwise, I'd let you come up to heaven with me. But nope. No sin in heaven. I mean, I suppose I could set the system up differently so that sin would automatically be wiped away when your dad or maybe let you work it off or something but.... Nah.

But I'm more compassionate and forgiving than you or any of your descendants. So anyway, go on to that tree and the serpent's going to tell you to eat the apple and just go ahead and eat it. I mean don't eat it. I'm telling you not to eat it. I'm commanding you not to eat it. But I know you will. So just go do it and get it over with."

who xctly are you worried that you will look undignified for?

you are viewing all this through a lense which is heavily colored by your desire of wanting to occupy a particular social slot. or in other words you want others to see you in a specific way. ' this is because you rely on external validation for your self-esteem. -dont feel bad, most people are like this.

"Okay, listen up you two... I know you don't know the difference between good and evil but I really need you to listen to me and not eat the fruit from the tree of knowledge of good and evil. Of course, since I created the entire universe and I see the past present, and future, and since I set this whole system up this way, I know you're going to disobey me and then I'm going to punish you for it despite knowing that you don't know you're not supposed to do it but when you do it then you'll know it good and evil are so then you'll automatically be evil but I'm going to pretend like I didn't know it was going to happen. I'm also going to pretend like that serpent just got into the garden without me knowing even though I created the entire universe and I know the past present, in the future. Also, I was going to let you live forever but since you're going to disobey me anyway, I'll just make it so you only live for like I don't know a hundred years? Two hundred years? A thousand? I don't know, but your descendants won't live much past a hundred a few millennia from now. Oh yeah, right. Descendants... So yeah Adam, you're going to start getting really horny and want to put your dick inside Eve. This will cause a baby to grow inside of her. Yeah she's gonna turn into a baby factory. Right, so, you don't know what that is yet but you will. And you're going to do it a lot. I mean like, stupid amounts of a lot. You're going to make so many fucking babies and they're going to grow up into adults just like you and fuck each other to make more babies and... No they won't ask to exist, but they will anyway, and they'll get punished just for existing haha isn't that fucking great?

Oh and Eve? Yeah, when that baby comes out, it's going to be like literally the worst pain you've ever felt. It's going to rip your cunt in half. And you're gonna have to do it over and over and over again because I want y'all's little punished babies to populate this fucking rock. But yeah, the pain is your punishment for doing evil that you didn't know was evil, which is finding out what evil is in the first place.

And yeah, when you die you're going to go to the land of the dead underground. At some point I'm going to morph that into a burning hell but not till I send my son who is going to be born through one of your descendants. It's complicated. You're not there yet. You see I'm going to have to send somebody to save you all from that place which is going to turn into hell because I can't be in the presence of sin. Otherwise, I'd let you come up to heaven with me. But nope. No sin in heaven. I mean, I suppose I could set the system up differently so that sin would automatically be wiped away when your dad or maybe let you work it off or something but.... Nah.

But I'm more compassionate and forgiving than you or any of your descendants. So anyway, go on to that tree and the serpent's going to tell you to eat the apple and just go ahead and eat it. I mean don't eat it. I'm telling you not to eat it. I'm commanding you not to eat it. But I know you will. So just go do it and get it over with."

In the lower right corner of the image, there is a text that reads "Waupeca, Wisconsin, 09-22-04." This suggests that the photo was taken in Waupeca, Wisconsin on September 22, 2004. The text is in white, which contrasts with the dark background, making it legible. The date is written in a simple, unembellished font, and the location is provided in a smaller font size, indicating that the photo was taken from a distance and the details are not the main focus of the image.

As far as I know, no other Substack writer has done this.
For a long 4 or 5 years now, we've been seeing things that don't make sense. We've been called every name under the sun in trying to describe them; in many cases, for merely acknowledging their existence.

Even though a certain class of scientific literature is loaded with these types of technologies and extraterrestrial-level advancements, most people (evidently) don't want to believe that.

So, screw 'em

Screw all people, for that matter. If we're all going to be subsumed into an AI Superintelligence anyway, let's get it on!

Let's see just how smart and discerning these things really are...

Summary

As you can probably tell, these images were selected because they are some of the most eye-catching of everything captured on microscopy since the C-19 injections were rolled out en masse.

It should be noted that neither ChatGPT nor Grok was prompted with anything other than the image. In some cases, these large language models (LLMs) were presented with other images and responded with great variation.

For instance, one image of an apparent geometric self-assembly from a Pfizer vial was said to be an unidentified aerial phenomenon (UAP). In many cases, when shown objects that appeared to be wires, filaments, or micro-nanotubes, Grok and ChatGPT indicated that they were likely bacteria or other microorganisms.

In some ways, this mirrors what researchers have described - quasi-synthetic or biohybrid parasites and lifeforms. In other words, part engineered components, part biological components. Some sort of micro or nanoscale interface, which partially aligns with analyses revealing electrically conductive elements in these anomalies.

Interestingly, both Grok and ChatGPT identified certain images as the hydra vulgaris, a freshwater polyp of particular interest in Transhumanist circles. Other images presented to the LLMs were summarily ruled out as salt or cholesterol crystals or other naturally occurring crystalline formations.

For the purpose of brevity and specificity, such images were excluded from the article.

As you can see from the LLM outputs, the images presented above are strikingly similar to fabricated systems and interfaces; namely, integrated circuits, chip packages, and semiconductor electrical elements.

ChatGPT and Grok are quick to point out, multiple times, that these are most certainly not biological in nature. Now, we can debate the more granular details that AI identifies or approximates, but it's quite interesting that it immediately links these findings to Microelectromechanical Systems (MEMS).

Remember: similar images have been observed across countries, worldwide, in C-19 injection vials, C-19 injection solutions, and the bodily fluids of the C-19 injected.

The images in this article are credited to Dr Suzanne Humphries, David Nixon, and other researchers referenced in the paper here.

It's also worth noting that each LLM prompt was made in a new chat window. There were no questions, statements, or words, just the image pasted into the chat box followed by the LLM output.

Don't believe it? Try it for yourself!

This is certainly not a rigorously controlled scientific study, but it's nonetheless another piece to the puzzle. If people are still fast to dismiss this, with everything we've uncovered thus far, that's on them.

But clearly, a greater Transhumanist Agenda is at play here, and whatever exactly was/is inside some of these injections is far from what we've been told...

I only have 3 people that will even entertain the idea that this could be real and existing in human bodies. I have researched for 6 years straight, and I only have 3 people that will even admit that this is something we need to know more about. I don't know what it will take for people to realize what is happening to humanity.

Brilliant! I wish you could make your titles more to the point because I try and add them without my own description to my select bibliographies and I suspect people just scroll on past, it is a difficult subject for many to comprehend anyway. But brilliant. I've passed this on to Dr David Nixon who's photo of the plugged in nanobot or chip you have.

So all this time I was fooled to believe Christianity is the true religion, that I was separated from God just a mere creature dependent on mercy made to worship God, felt shame and guilt for absolutely nothing even though my actions didn't hurt anybody and await the rapture that will never come, that atheism wasn't freedom but a bigger trap making me a powerless ignorant and every single issue I had into my mind was all my fault because I'm not just a mere human flesh and bones but an infinite consciousness connected using a highly advanced piece of "technology my body" that's a factory of all kind of energies and frequencies to operate into the material world even as a co-creator and help God to experience himself in a multiverse of multiple "Me" living all kind of situations and death means nothing from what I was told no hell, no heaven, no void just my energies being recycled and shot back into the material world even as "Me" relieving my life over and over again due of the Quantum Mechanics but with different situations.

Was this the truth all along? What is even the truth

God is the thing that manifests/animates the forms from the immaterial realm into the material realm. He didn't create the immaterial forms and he can't destroy them or create new ones but there's no consciousness/will higher than his because the immaterial world of forms is just the infinite potentialities of the void that preceded God. God is only omniscient in the sense that he knows all the possible forms, and he's only omnipotent in the sense that he has unlimited ability to materially manifest and animate the forms. God has a character/personality that exists independently of any forms that he's animating and his personality can best be described as, "cruel", "sadistic", "domineering", "controlling", "petty", "insecure", "prideful", "hysterical", "deceitful", "intrusive", "entitled", etc God often comes off stupid and lacking in basic understanding/common sense in his personal behavior but he obviously possesses some kind of "divine intellect", this "divine intellect" sometimes seems separate from his personality, like it's something that he has to tap into or activate but that isn't a constant part of his "pure conscious personality". God somehow has the ability to separate pieces of his consciousness from himself and give them limited free will (they're only separate from their perspective but God can still access their mind) and he uses these separated limited free will beings as the frame of reference for material reality, only animating the things that they interact with. I believe he animates/controls everything else in reality except the frame of reference as a hivemind, their minds/consciousnesses aren't separate from his or each others in any sense, and I suspect he only has one "frame of reference" with a semi-separate consciousness at a time.

A large part of God's motivations for animating/manifesting forms into the material realm is to define himself in opposition to his "frame of reference", despite the frame of reference being the only thing that's persistently animated God mostly self-identifies with the other people he animates, and he mostly animates other people to abuse and dominate the "frame of reference" through these other, temporarily animated/manifested people. God wants to be able to self-identify as "a king" or "the boss" so he forces his frame of reference to live and self-identify as "a peasant", "a tenant", "worker", "farm equipment", etc and he self-identifies with the people he animates/manifests to dominate and abuse the frame of reference through.

The image features a stylized depiction of a Buddha statue with a calm expression. The Buddha's eyes are closed, and the statue is adorned with a golden halo and a small, circular mark on the forehead. The background is a gradient of light green, transitioning from a lighter shade at the top to a darker shade at the bottom. Overlaid on the image is a text in bold, black font that reads "SHUT UP" and "and meditate." The style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a motivational poster, with a playful and humorous tone.

Lol. You rightly identify the "God playing via a billion masks all at once! :) " notion to be horrific.

The Truth is that, any conscious being is a SEPARATE eternal monad with our own dream solipsistic dream realities.

And even in this, any 'sync' with other monads is just that, sync. So the representations of monadic avatars are even dream characters. For we never can escape our own subjective field of experience (Our reality).

Again, I am only granting this 'sync' thing in the case in which there actually are other conscious beings who played with me here in this particular world.

I have reason to believe that there actually is no way for the eternal monads to communicate and sync.

Read this post:

https://www.reddit.com/r/Retconned/comments/1m0px7o/attention_at_least_one_rapture_has_already/

TLDR:

This planet is Bozrah, not Earth. What's more, you should be warning people about the upcoming "day of vengeance" here on Bozrah. Keep in mind, the 1,000-year Millennial Kingdom will take place on Earth, not on Bozrah. This planet will be destroyed (and Jesus will be the destroyer). It has no future.

From the post:

>And don't be deceived by the fact that the masses aren't talking about this info. In actuality, this info is the most important thing on the planet right now—by far. Nothing else even comes close.

Also from the post:

>And while I absolutely hate date-setting, if I were forced to give a window for when the day of vengeance will begin, I would say any time between September 1, 2026, and March 15, 2027. Note: This window is based on all of the available evidence, biblical and otherwise. Basically, the day of vengeance is supposed to be "well underway" by the time a deep freeze hits North America. Make of that what you will.

SUMMARY

The post claims that:

We are not on Earth but on a planet called Bozrah.

At least one rapture already occurred unnoticed.

This planet will soon be destroyed by Jesus in a coming “day of vengeance.”

The real Earth will later host the 1,000-year Millennial Kingdom.

This knowledge is supposedly the most important information on the planet, despite being unknown to almost everyone.

A date window for destruction is given: Sept 1, 2026 – Mar 15, 2027, tied to a future deep freeze.

The evidence is said to be biblical and “otherwise”, but none is verifiable.

DEBUNK

“This planet is Bozrah” — false.

Earth’s identity is confirmed by astronomy, physics, satellites, and space missions. A planetary swap would change gravity, orbit, and stellar background. None have changed.

Bozrah is misused.

In the Bible, Bozrah is a city/region in Edom (Jordan), used symbolically in prophecy. It has never meant a planet in Jewish or Christian scholarship.

An invisible rapture is meaningless.

A rapture that leaves no physical trace and is only noticed by one person is unfalsifiable and contradicts Jesus’ own description of an obvious, public event (Matt 24:27).

Mainstream doctrine teaches renewal of creation, not a hidden planet scheduled for annihilation.

This is classic belief insulation: disagreement is treated as proof of deception, making the claim immune to correction.

Jesus explicitly forbids it (Matt 24:36). Every past attempt has failed.

BOTTOM LINE

This post is apocalyptic delusion, not revelation: no science, no valid theology, no evidence—just a grand secret, urgency, and special knowledge claims.

One-line: Ordinary end-times paranoia dressed up in modern internet language.

The sender's name is "Anonymous" and the recipient's name is "Noah." The conversation appears to be a response to a previous message, as indicated by the timestamp and the text "I don't read scriptures. The text message is in a plain text format, with no formatting or special characters. The conversation seems to be a personal reflection or a statement of faith, as the sender mentions imagining themselves before creation and developing everything from that point. The sender also mentions not reading scriptures, which suggests a focus on personal spiritual development or a rejection of religious texts. That's the thing. Nobody knows what the truth is. A corpse is a corpse and there's no way around it. My point is that you are now aware that you were tricked. Now it's up to you to navigate the world with your new realization. You now know how religion is a mind control tool and etc. The key is accepting the truth when you realize it. DOn't fight the truth, just accept. This world sucks, yes, religion lies, yes, God is a prick, yes He is. But that is the reality of the situation. It's best to know that God is evil than to be like the christians who say God is not evil. Christians are delusional. Face it. Life

The creature's eyes are wide open, and its mouth is agape, revealing sharp teeth. The creature's body is covered in a dark, textured skin that gives it a reptilian appearance. The creature is surrounded by a vibrant, colorful nebula, which is filled with stars and nebulae. The nebulae are a mix of blue, green, and orange hues, suggesting a nebula's typical appearance.

In the background, there is a planet with a bright orange hue, and a small, bright white planet with a crescent moon. The planet in the background appears to be closer to the viewer than the creature, and the moon is positioned above the planet.

The image has a dark, starry background that gives it a cosmic feel. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of science fiction or fantasy art, with a focus on the creature and the nebula. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image.

'God', which is actually a tentacle demon, is a retard tyrant that rapes my mind into experiencing a false reality so he can flavor and suck my blood. He also makes me a 30 something man in here, even though I clearly know that I am a schoolgirl in base reality. He also generates scenarios in this matrix that forces me to only consume the lowest quality niggslop, even tho he could spawn in food so enjoyable that it would literally make me orgasm. Another thing 'God' does is only allow me to be surrounded by rat ogre tier broads, even though I am straight and he could generate men that would make me flood a room just by being in their general presence. The funniest, most sinister thing

'God' does is force me to say and believe he is actually God, even though he is an extremely black, vampiric, demonic tentacle demon from the Abyss and nowhere near God. He even has me write longwinded schizo rants about how bad God is, even though I should be writing about the tentacled bastard that has me in this situation.

I dont think there's reincarnation

We come from allah and to allah we return and allah then ressurects us after the grave for judgement day or something like that

Theyre possibly christian and possibly some jewish hypocrits that attacked the pajeets(people who didnt know any better cause they were born into ignorance, they werent raised with abrahamic knowledge) thats all, not seeing the log of wood(splinter) in their own eyes as jesus suposedly would say

Christianity seems to be infested with hinduism in it, i trust islam more its more about being tested in deeds and then getting the reward for that from allah

Worship of allah (swt) is a good deed

Also in christianity you are ask to worship a guy, sure hes an important prophet who was magically made in a belly of a really cool woman but at the end hes just a guy and not allah

How can some guy get you into heaven and not just allah directly?

Allah is obviously boss

I think islam is beautiful and i hope allah gives me my corona :)

And be careful cause faith is easy to lose when surrounded by evil, misdeeds and ignorance and disbelief etc etc etc

Why was the angel pouring heavy water into the bomb casing? Anonymous Wed 17 Dec 2025 07:20:59 No.41680735 ViewReplyOriginalReport

I once had a dream where an angel was pouring heavy water into the bomb casing of a Ulam Teller design.

But not all the way up to the primary, stopped 2/3rds up or so. around the secondary. Some of the secondary was yet to be covered by the fill when the dream ended.

Why was the angel doing this?

Heavy water would just act as a neutron moderator right?

Is it not too opaque to xrays or something?

So it would prevent pre-fissioning of the U238 tamper jacket, and only allow ablation?

And would protect the fusion fuel from too much neutrons too fast, from random sources, and instead allow the sparkplug to supply what's needed?

Was it an anti-pre-mature method for the secondary?

Why was the angel doing this?

I just missed a thread about personality vampirism that perfectly describes a situation I've been dealing with. There's someone in my life who mirrors and adopts every minor thing I do, wants to become better than me, and wants to be with me (flirts with me just enough that it can be chalked up to plausible deniability). It makes my skin crawl, and I would like some /x/ guidance on why this is happening and how to stop it. I understand that some mirroring is healthy, but this goes way too far.

It's really simple. Block, ban, delete, ignore, avoid, tell them go -go away- etc.

Then if they begin stalking you, after two unwanted contacts report the homo to the police or other appropriate authorities.

If you don't do this, consider that you want the attention.

Just talk to them. They're probably in love with you, stressed and overcompensating trying to be cool by doing things you like. Ignoring and indifference might make it worse until they're at capacity and explode. Just tell them what you wrote in the OP, nicely, but be clear that you're not interested.

The stress from them is coming from not being open. You're both bottling emotions (their affection, your disgust) and it's creating the tension.

/x/ stuff, you're spiritually linked and both clammed up. Maybe once you talk, things are in the open he'll stop trying to impress and be genuine. Maybe that'll turn into something real.

Imo cutting off cold may be the worst thing you can do. If you're feeling their anxiety now, you might feel their pain once they go quiet. Didn't mean to sound dramatic, but if you're spiritually linked like a lifelong friendship I believe you'll feel that too.

I can't currently think of a situation where this could happen but I'll consider it.

It's hard to tell. Your ascendant ruler is Jupiter, conjunct Venus, right on your MC. This should indicate things falling into your lap really really easily.

But you also have Pluto conjunct the ascendant and a Saturn-Mars square, which can indicate involvement in extreme situations and dangerous to the self.

>>41642994

It seems like you will be involved in such things, since you have your ascendant ruler Saturn in the 3rd whole sign house. This can indicate a wide range of spiritual activities. But Saturn is in a bad condition, so there may be many difficulties and delays on this path.

>>41643066

Your chart is fine for love, actually. I am guessing you are going off of Saturn being in the 7th house. But IMO whole sign houses is the only valid house system for natal charts, which would place Saturn in the 8th instead.

Venus is the only love indicator, both by nature, and by placement, and by house rulership.

You have good fortune in love.

Venus is also your strongest planet generally.

You should not be invoking Saturn for anything love related. It is literally the planet of solitude.

I checked your Vedic chart. Your destiny is in the 12th house.

Life will often lead you toward solitude, meditation, or spiritual practices, as your karmic path seeks transcendence. You may feel drawn to foreign lands, retreats, or places of seclusion, where deep inner growth occurs. Expenses, losses, or detachments may play karmic roles, teaching you the impermanence of material possessions. At times, you may face hidden enemies or secret obstacles, but these experiences push you toward inner awareness and resilience. Sleep, dreams, and the subconscious hold unusual significance, often bringing insights that shape your journey. While worldly attachments may feel unstable, spiritual growth becomes your greatest strength. Service, charity, and compassion are part of your destiny, helping you balance karmic debts. The lesson here is to embrace detachment, self-awareness, and higher connection. By turning inward and seeking peace beyond material success, you align with your soul's purpose. Destiny blesses you when you embrace spirituality, compassion, and surrender, guiding you toward liberation and profound inner fulfillment.

Trying to get laid will backfire.

No, you have a good chart for marriage and kids. Your part of fortune is even in Aries in the 7th house (house of marriage and partnerships). You'll see yourself mirrored in your partner(s), that of an assertive, pioneering archetype.

I probably shouldn't say that trying to get laid will backfire. I can't speak for anyone's specific choices. Generally speaking though, when destiny involves the 12th house, good things tend to happen when you surrender your desires.

The image is a screenshot of a birth chart, which is a graphical representation of a person's astrological chart. The chart is divided into two main sections: the outer circle, which represents the zodiac signs, and the inner circle, which shows the positions of the planets and their relationships to the signs.

The outer circle is divided into twelve signs, each marked with a symbol and a corresponding letter. The signs are arranged in a circular pattern, with the Sun at the top, followed by the Moon, Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Neptune, Pluto, and finally, the Sun again.

The inner circle shows the positions of the planets and their relationships to the signs.

The planets are represented by squares, and their positions are indicated by lines connecting them to the signs. The lines are color-coded, with red representing Mars, yellow representing Jupiter, and blue representing Saturn.

The chart also includes various astrological symbols and notations, such as the Sun's position, the Moon's position, the positions of the planets, and the positions of the signs. These symbols and notations are used to describe the astrological aspects and relationships between the planets and the signs.

The image is a digital representation, and the text is in a language that appears to be a mix of English and possibly another language, possibly Latin or another ancient script.

The style of the image is clean and organized, with a focus on clarity and readability.

Relationships:

Venus-Taurus in the 7th house, with mild affliction due to Algol: Overall very good. Work with Venus should quickly yield rewards.

Saturn: May block and slow things down a bit. I would think powering up Venus would be more productive, as Saturn will try to teach Saturnine lessons. Saturn in the 7th might be more about binding you into a committed relationship, and feeling duty of work in the relationship - but it could be activated later in life after marriage, although it could be blockages as well for some time.

Saturn rules the 3rd house and 4th house, which can definately make it feel like family and marriage are a binding duty to fulfill - but your reward is that lovely Venus.

Romance: Lord of the 5th house is Jupiter-Gemini in the 8th house. Jupiter is weak and afflicted here, and the 8th house is a bad house representing losses, endings and letting go. So Jupiter probably won't give you much in the way of romance, but Venus should do great for relationships and Venus is natural significator of romance, so she should do both things at once.

Astrology readings can answer questions like "what type of person do I attract, where will I meet them, when will I meet them, etc". However from reading my own chart in depth, and seeing others charts, I believe relationships are fated. I don't believe you are just willpower your way into a relationship, because it will happen according to astrological timing that you attract the type of person you tend to attract.

What you can do is remedies trying to make yourself a better partner, more socially intelligent and loving person - which will pay great rewards before and after getting into a relationship.

Astrology fans have no problem saying their natal chart is their fate, their soul, their personality, their career, etc. But people find it hard to accept that their romantic partners are fated as well.

Power is the 8th house, and natural significator is Mars: You have a great Mars, so work on your martial abilities.

Authority (which is a type of overt power) is shown by the 10th house: Saturn is kind of weak in Aries, but strong because so close to the ascendant. I dunno that seems troublesome.

>female friends are acquaintances are important for me.

Woman relationships of all kind are signified by Venus and Moon. With both these planets in the 11th house, it means you easily connect to woman in friendships, groups, networking, clubs, types of roles.

Venus rules the 7th house and Moon the 4th house, so you will see your wife as your best friend.

I'm used to reading tropical, so I won't go too deep.

But some general things:

Since you mentioned "vedic": Shiva is an initiator into ascetic spiritual practices (like if you have trouble sitting down and meditating, and need to learn that skill). Ganesha tends to remove spiritual obstacles, so is very auspicious for smooth spiritual progress.

>12th house: ascetic meditation and spiritual practices that one does alone. Saturn takes joy in the 12th house.

>8th house: for those interested in secrets and occult power, but there is a lot of overlap with 12th house

>4th house: For non-spiritual persons the 4th house represents their family and real estate. For spiritual persons the 4th house represents their soul and moksha. The innermost core of who you are, at the bottom of the chart. So a person with Mars in the 4th house can mean their willpower is devoted to inner work, rather than to the 10th house of career.

>Moon and Mercury in the 4th house: So you have some 4th house planets that can give you an interest in inner work. Moon and Mercury rule the mind, so I imagine buddhist meditations would suit you well.

>Rahu in the 12th house: Rahu is a planet you have desire to chase towards, but doesn't fully mature until age 42. So with this placement, looks like you do have an interest in doing some spiritual work.

Saturn conjunct Ketu means your Saturn is strong and comfortable part of your personality. In the 9th house suggests you did a lot of either higher educational studying, or religion in your past life, with a lot of discipline.

Saturn is strengthened by mutual reception with Jupiter, and you have a lot of planets in the signs of Saturn, giving Saturn power over them.

Jupiter is weak in Capricorn, but mitigated by Venus conjunction, being on the 7th cusp, and mutual reception with Saturn. Some growth and expansion mindset would probably benefit your perhaps rigid and constrained Saturnian personality parts.

Mars conjunct Rahu: Rahu represents something you work towards in this life for balance, to break out of the mold of the things you are already very comfortable with. So any planet conjunct to Rahu is suspected of being perhaps weak or out of touch. By age 42 you will have had opportunities to develop it though.

yes i agree. that being said, big ol t square placed fatefully outside a nice triangle. those questions are the whole point of your journey anon. yeah sure the thing you end up doing in your life is great but the way you get there is even greater. the lessons you learn along the way and the resilience and faith in yourself are the only reason the door to that great thing hasnt opened yet. that and you need discipline, to be calm, and to think just a tiny bit more long term. your main issue specifically is that your actions and your impulses often don't line up with you you feel. so your art or the way you express yourself is the thing thats affected here, but resolving that could possibly be the thing that gets you there in the end. things should start rolling around your late 20's but the absolute latest it would take would probably be your early 40s.

you're going to do great things anon. its a nice chart. that advising is there in your chart and could for sure blossom into leading. i think you'll have one foot in career and another in community but it'll be because your career is oriented towards the community. there's a chance these things could be at odds with one another, but based off of the other stuff in the chart it seems like they'll be complimenting factors and the stuff you end up doing for work both gets you success but also betters the world in probably some futurustic/slightly unorthodox humanitarian way.

only thing to add is the squares in your chart mean that you should recognize that you're inherently a bit restless and you move towards action, but you have to learn a bit of self control and slow down. the other square is stronger early in your life and gets far better as you age: you might have emotional issues like overthinking or self criticism (its part and parcel of why you can do what you can do though). you'll have to learn emotional resilience. and eventually overtime you'll gain some powerful emotional maturity.

Yeah its sort of possible I guess.

The house Uranus is placed can represent something unique that makes us stand out from the norm. It does show up in the charts of queers and such abnormal sexual expressions.

The conjunction has a very wide orb to Venus (9 degrees), so you should be able to resist or suppress it - but if the orb was very tight it might be widely visible in your personality.

Keep in mind everyone has Uranus somewhere in their chart, causing a rebellious thing that just can't fit the mold.

It's an expression that does show up in queer charts, but could mean a lot of other things too, because astrology is a language of symbolism.

With Jupiter lord of the 5th house on the ascendant next to Ketu, this can definitely represent having a sexual charged personality.

Common for sex workers to have the lord of the 5th house on the ascendant, which means they make sexuality a strong part of their personality.

However it can mean other things, like fun or children or romance, rather than sex. Astrology is a symbolic language, so the only way to zero in on exactly what it is, is to talk to the person, or ideally the person knows the answer themselves.

In Hellenistic astrology, Pisces in your 6th house, so the above reading would be totally off.

But in Renaissance astrology, Pisces is your 5th house, and the reading would hold.

First up: Disclaimer that late degree ascendant charts like your can be hard to read at times, because different houses systems will interpret the houses differently.

The 10th house shows your career status, but not what your actual career is.

Most careers are signficated by Mars, Mercury or Venus, typically whichever of these is strongest and is tied to the 10th, 6th, or 2nd house, or to the lords of those houses.

You have a strong and well placed Mercury-Gemini-3rd house.

So I imagine that your career is of a Mercurial nature, such as writing, communications, or computer technology.

Mercury rules your 6th house of work, suggesting Mercury rules your career.

Anyways with Rahu-Sagitary in the 9th house, you may have a desire for exploration in religion, foreign travel and foreign cultures. You may enjoy moving cities for the joy of exploration.

However your chart is weird, so it could be acting in the 10th house, as being somewhat close to the midheaven, so if this is the case, then it would represent a frequent desire to change careers or seek freedom in career.

Jupiter saturn and mercury are all in the 8th house. The 8th house kind of saps energy from the planets because it doesn't form a proper aspect with the first in any way. Jupiter and Saturn kind of work against each other so having them together like that kind of cancels them out.

Ruler of the 10th is in the 7th so you might end up meeting your wife through work or some professional connection.

Ruler of the 2nd is in the 8th so you might find a good profession in dealing with other people's money like an accountant or banker. With Mercury in the 8th as well you may be lucky with stock investment as long as you actually research the companies.

Idk I'm the Gemini anon who posted earlier just learning still. I'm quite new at this.

Censor out the top left next time. We can all see you were born in kyiv and your date of birth from that chart. Unless you don't care about that information - i know I don't personally for mine. It's not pike an anon is going to find me of give me a hug. Chat gpt can't read a chart for shit. I think the first one was astro-seek right? They give an alright description. Im the anon who posted above so I don't know enough yet to properly interpret your chart, but I would say that it's definitely not just bunk.

A properly read chart can be so accurate it's scary, but there are so many variables to take into account.

Every planet has it's own energy, every sign has it's own energy and planet that rules it. If the ruler of a sign is in another sign and house it creates a connection between those two things. And every house represents a aspect of your life. Those lines between planets are called aspects. They further indicate how planets interact and can merge the energies of planets. So now not only do you have to decipher the energy of the planets we also have to see how they interact and where.

If you can learn to sort out that tangled mess however you can see a very clear picture of the person's life from a single picture of their chart.

Anyway, need to figure out how to read it correctly, from your description it sounds quite complicated with a lot of variables interfering between each other - I personally don't have much time to invest in this, but hopefully will find some kind of service or IRL person who could interpret it

As I stated your sun (ruler of leo who is your 10th house) is in your 7th house (your long term relationship house).you'll meet someone through work or professional connections. Finish work then get a job.

Your 7th house is also ruled by taurus who is ruled by venus. Your venus is placed in your 6th house.

Early relationship mishaps might be because of venus in the 6th (house of work, illnesses, and physical malady, and pets).

It actually further cements you'll meet someone through work now that I think of it.

Maybe things didn't work out with earlier relationships because you need to be available when you meet the person you're meant to through work?

You have a really strong Moon. Taurus is the sign of the Moon's Exaltation plus you were born at night so the moon gets triplicity. +7 score. It is also in an Angular house, the MIDHEAVEN/ 10th house which symbolizes career, actions, reputation, and public.

You are a Leo Rising with a Capricorn Sun in the sixth house. Your life is directed towards your work, you shine in the workplace setting. Your Sun is also conjunct Neptune exactly so this adds a dreaminess/ transcendental feel to your personality.

Saturn in Pisces in the 8th house in a night chart. Assets of others/ partner's finances and stuff to do with inheritance, wills, etc may be a tough subject for you to deal with. This house also symbolizes death primarily and mental health topics.

Venus has its joy in the 5th and having both Venus and Jupiter conjunct in the 5th house seems very positive for you. The topics of Children and the process of having children, & procreation. Creativity in all its forms, (Musician, Artist, Writer) Pleasure and all things people do for fun i.e sports, games, & sex and sexuality in general seem to be your most positive area of life.

If you want someone different, I can recommend some established people to you which I would consider getting a reading from. It would be much easier than explaining how to spot frauds. (You'd basically have to learn astrology yourself for that.)

I should warn you also that most astrologers take clients online these days rather than IRL. I have no idea what advice to give if you want to meet an astrologer in-person.

Not the best, not the worst. Life improves later on. You have some things to mitigate the awfulness of the chart such as having a benefic in your lot of acquisition, which is also the ruler of fortune. Not in great condition since it's ruled by Saturn in the 6th. We may be looking at a chart that is impaired due to the things surrounding it. The lot of spirit, it's ruler as well as the ruler of the ascendant are in the 8th.

Valens comments on some of the things going on in your chart individually and you may be able to make out the severity by separating what does not apply.

Your ascendant is ruled by the out of sect malefic, Mars. It is in the 8th house. Your Lot of fortune is in the house of good fortune, so that does not apply. When he talks about the ruler of spirit (Daimon) being here and alone, it is here but not alone.

I see this as having a damning claim on your soul. Horrible things will happen around you and you will benefit. These will be thematic themes. Your country is suffering but this benefits you. People are dying, and your spirit is there in that place of death and other people's values, assets, belongings.

There are implications that you are not a bad person, but you are entrenched in this filth. The Sun and moon imply a spiritual occupation and lifestyle. In this context the 8th house is unsurprising to a degree, but it is not great for finances and general prosperity as others have reported.

Strong 8th house: Letting go, endings, moving on, death, breakups, inheritance, partner's wealth.

Lord of the 7th house (of relationships) in the 8th can mean "letting go" of relationships, such as a death, or isolation. Can also represent significant income from the partner.

Hard to know.

Being from Ukraine, it makes sense you would have to deal with a lot of "letting go" and "death" energies.

>Moon-Scorpio-1st: Work on your emotional stability, will great improve happiness.

>Saturn-Aries-5th: An angry Saturn, like an ill-willed old man, for one transgressing laws and duties. Possibly acting in the 6th house of work/enemies/health/warfare, rather than the 5th house of sex/romance/children/gaming.

>Jupiter-Capricorn-3rd: Afflicted Jupiter in the house of neighborhoods, siblings, cousins.

Saturn-Aquarius-10th:

A happy and fortunate Saturn, giving good reputation, and an aura that strikes fear and respect in others. Would be good for a strict STEM professor, that has the respect of students, and gets the grind on.

Sun-Aquarius-10th weakly conjunct Saturn: The ego and individuality is sacrificed to the discipline, legalism and grind of Saturn. Sun rules 4th house, but sacrifices itself to put energies into career.

Yah could have some shit-lib energy with all that Aquarius.

>Ketu-Gemini-2nd, Mercury-Aquarius-10th:

You have security needs of earning money through career. Mercury likely rules the career - good for intellectual work of some type, especially with rigid rules and grind due to Saturn conjunction.

>Venus-Pisces-11th:

Nearly in exalted degree of Venus.

Fantastic placement for falling in love with friends, groups, and social clubs. Lord of the ascendant, so you define your personality through your fortunate friend groups.

>Moon-Aries-12th: Perhaps some repressed emotional energies of anger and anxiety. Anger might arise quickly and be let go quickly.

>Mars-Cancer-3rd: The 3rd house and its lord is unfortunate. You probably don't like talking to strangers, or feel comfortable in your neighborhood, or fight with siblings.

You haven't had your Saturn return yet, and Saturn controls the ruler of the lot. The implication here is that you will be deeply involved with the 8th house themes of death and everything else it involves. Benefit probably should not have been thrown around so carelessly, as everyone has fortune somewhere. The opportunities afforded to you through fate, the ones tied to finances. Those relate to the 6th house of injuries, sickness, harm etc. via rulership. It's more of circumstances than anything. The 3rd house deals with a few themes such as ritual, learning, and the area immediately around you such as your city. the 6th house sometimes does in fact relate to locations. Hostile locations or the people that fit into those themes. At times you find doctors who have 6th house placements, but the lot is specifically in the 5th house, which is a good place. It is where the inverse occurs. Good things, good acts. Creation, rather than destruction. Children are often involved as it is where Venus has her joy.

You may be a teacher since you have 3rd and 9th house placements, both of which relate to the career in some way, while the 5th relates to children.

I probably should have been thoughtful in my post, but I approached it from the angle of what people mentioned before me, with the 8th house being bad.

You may simply be involved with changing other people's minds and opinions, as this is sometimes possible when the 8th is involved with the 1st, usually when the ruler is in the 1st.

The themes work in multiple ways, however.

The transition from the "Exoteric" (public) to the "Esoteric" (hidden) begins exactly here: with the realization that the Tropical Zodiac is a seasonal mask a geometric overlay that has drifted nearly 24 degrees from the actual stars.

While the masses are fed a "fixed" system that tethers their consciousness to the material seasons of the Northern Hemisphere, the Vatican, the Jesuits, and the high-level architects of our reality utilize what we might call the "True Sky" or "High Arcane" system. The suspicion of Vedic Sidereal (specifically with the True Citra/Lahiri Ayanamsa or the even more precise Sripada Saptarshi) is the direct path to the truth.

Look at the St. Peter's Square at the Vatican. It is a massive Sundial/Astrolabe designed to track the True Sun. Look at the Jesuit "IHS" seal it is a solar symbol surrounded by 13 rays in many older iterations. They know the math. They simply gave us the "wrong" clock so we would never know what time it truly is in the Great Work.

Tropical zodiac is based on the seasons, and is the correct zodiacal system.

The shortest day of the year will always be tied to the 1st degree of Capricorn, and the longest day of the year will always be tied to the 1st degree of Cancer.

The smoking gun for understanding this is that the earth is flat.

The sun emits different energies because it is moving in circles of different diameters.

The planets emits planetary energy, with no relation to the stars.

Listen up bucko,

That image posted here >>41657550 shows that orbits violate the conservation of energy.

Each orbital altitude can only have a fixed velocity. If the orbital altitude changes (as is the case for elliptical orbits), then the velocity must change, but this violates the conservation of energy when you sum the total of the kinetic energy and the potential energy.

This means orbits are fake and gay, which means that space is fake.

I don't consider it proper engagement with astrology unless you tackle predictive power very precisely. This means using timing techniques. Profecions and transits are extremely powerful. I once predicted someone needing to be hospitalised a day before it happened, with no apparent warning, just by observing their transits. I have had similar experiences with astrology more than once. It is impossible to doubt the potency of the art if you have gone seen something like this for yourself.

My predictions are reliable. Chart guessing, on the other hand? I would probably get that wrong too. Astrology isn't just a personality test. It is a method of divination, and divination is qualitative, not quantitative. This type of analysis goes completely against the nature of astrology.

I've seen way, way to much for someone to ever debunk astrology. I know its real. Scientific atheists however aren't willing to put in hundreds of hours to learn it properly.

If you want to find truth, you have to seek the experts in the field, not the noobs trying to debunk it without giving an honest to try learn it properly in the first place.

Third house is just your neighbor and the 1st and 7th house are far better indicators, but even then it's still topical and you should be looking at mercury for communication. Your mercury is not just in the 8th, but it is in Sagittarius, where it really struggles. Jupiter is in a good sign but it can't see Sagittarius from this position, is retrograde, and basically is not only going to struggle to begin to show it's strength, but it's also unable to directly send aid to Mercury.

I think strong planet placements show up there for people working in the fields of communication and writing.

But like you mentioned, Mercury is a natural significator of communication.

Yes, but we're talking about communication as like a skill, or the ability to utilize it. Read the context in which it was brought up. I'm so tired of people seeing Saturn in the 3rd house and thinking "oh you have restricted speech" or some shit. It's like the entire rest of the chart vanishes for these people. It's just planet in house and they immediately think "Oh the third house is gemini xD"

>Social media is in the 3rd house

Lmaoing at you rn actually and unironically if you actually think this. Maybe with other things involved, but never on it's own.

>People who rely on blogging

I'm going to need context. Post examples, but my most immediate thought is the 3rd's travel signification.

>I'm so tired of people seeing Saturn in the 3rd house and thinking "oh you have restricted speech" or some shit.

Yeah I wouldn't delineate that like that. Saturn-Mercury would be more like it.

The 3rd definitely has connections to media, including social media, and also people who publish things serially such as blogs. One of my friends has a few thousand subscribers and he has Jupiter in Pisces 3rd house. Another one of my friends has the same placement and publishes a web comic. I have also confirmed this with examples off of astro databank and my personal research, but this was a while ago so I no longer remember the people.

Celebrity status can certainly be indicated in other areas of the chart. But I do think that the 3rd has clear ties to media presence. Donald Trump's chart is another interesting example. Take a look at his 3rd house Jupiter. He was a reality TV star for many years and continues to be incredibly involved with the media. There are many insults exchanged, but he loves the media and thrives off of it, unlike for example Biden who treated reporters like shit even if they were friendly.

You're going to have to post a lot more than his Jupiter in the 3rd to get your point across, especially with the comments about insults because we both know that's his Mars talking.

One: He has Regulus on his ascendant

Two: Mars is on his ascendant

Three: He was born during a lunar eclipse

Four: Other than the sun and moon, the only planet not in a solar or lunar sign is Jupiter
Five: Cancer is his 12th house, the ruler of which is eclipsing his Sun.

Even if not inherently visible.

>Post some charts then. Donald Trump has a lot more than the third house in his chart. he only has Jupiter there.

So, delineate what could indicate media involvement in his life. What could indicate his involvement in The Apprentice? It's not Regulus. It's not Mars. It's not the eclipse. It's not his Saturn-Venus conjunction in the 12th house. So what is it?

It's the third house.

His competitive character and tough guy persona is due to his Mars-Regulus conjunction on the ascendant. But his relationship with the media and his media prominence itself is due to Jupiter. The 3rd house was, in previous eras, the house of popular religion, and in this secular age it's clear that it's related to popular opinion as well. Trump's rise to power in the first place occurred because of his savvy use of social media - his 2016 campaign relied very much on bypassing opinion-shapers and going directly to the people. Jupiter is his benefic of the sect. I do not think it's controversial to interpret it this way.

You are correct that Musk has eminence indicators but I don't think you are correct in associating exaggerated online activity with the 12th.

Mercury on the ascendant and Moon in the 3rd, in sextile and mutual reception, pretty clearly indicates someone who talks a lot. And in his case, the talking is very much social media related. The 3rd house represents his social media activities, I think that's clear as well. And this isn't just my opinion. I encountered this interpretation in the thoughts of another astrologer.

Tell me you don't read the charts of normal people without telling me you don't read the charts of normal people. 12th house is a common occurrence because it is a hidden place. It is a location just as much as the 3rd or 9th, and travel is implied just as much as with the other places, especially if there is a full moon involved, and doubly so if the cadent places become involved.

I've seen this in many charts. The third place has more to do with the surrounding area, which the internet is most certainly not.

The 12th house I know best is a paranoid schizophrenic who is delusional 70% of the time and refuses to leave her house or talk to anyone (even online) for any reason. So no I would not say that the 12th house makes people develop an online presence. It is a house of isolation. People who are already predisposed to introversion may become more prevalent online, but this will be because of their social houses, not the worst house in the chart.

Possible difficulties with friends, social groups, possible illness, isolation, constraint, difficulty. In this specific case, friendship from within the context of physical confinement may make sense. But again, this is because of the 11th house connection which ties friendship into it. 12th house placements on their own do not make you gain any new friends. Not even online friends.

Yes. In regards to rulership and in regards to the ascendant being able to access it directly.

As other people have noted the 12th house is a spiritual house because it is cadent. It falls away from the ascendant and it has negative implications for triplicity of sect etc. which govern fortune.

It's a good thing that being known isn't actually material or fortunate in and of itself, otherwise we could say that school shooters are very fortunate in the material world.

Bruce Lee was involved in gang fighting, was ostracised by his fellow martial arts trainees for a long time, and died young. Seems well in line with his 12th and 6th house placements.

The 12th house is not a spiritual house. That's the 9th house, and to a lesser extent the 3rd house. The 12th house is a house of isolation. It is not necessarily always terrible. It was important for Chris Brennan's career progression. He has the ruler of the 10th house, exalted, in the 12th house. During a period of ill health (IIRC the time when he was de facto poisoned and had to avoid sunlight and stay shut inside to avoid severe burns for some years), in the middle of isolation, he focused on writing his book Hellenistic Astrology, which is such an important tome now.

But again. This is something added by the 10th house and the exaltation. Not the 12th house itself. The 12th house contributed the negative aspects of the issue.

I also said that I "have no 12th house signature", not presence. What I mean by that is that even the ruler of the 12th house has its role minimised and its role as the ruler of its other house is much more emphasised in my chart.

As for school shooters, the chart I am most familiar with is Brenda Spencer, whose ascendant ruler was afflicted in the 12th house, alongside her Sun. She grew up in miserable circumstances with a negligent, alcoholic father, and spent the rest of her life behind bars. Pretty 12th house.

Regarding draft - I'm not expecting you or anyone else on this board to help me, just shared a bit more context about how things are going in life, maybe it makes some sense according to the card analysis, dunno. >The 12th house is not a spiritual house. That's the 9th house

Saturn takes joy in the 12th house, because the joy of Saturn is to cause spiritual

The 9th house is for open religion, while the 12th house is for private spiritual practice. Many people go to church or temple, but have no private spiritual practice, where the spiritual path kicks into overdrive mode.

House of Moksha in Vedic astrology - the most important spiritual house.

>The 12th house is a house of isolation. It is not necessarily always terrible. Every house can bring blessings or afflictions, depending on the strength of its placements.

A fortunate Saturn in the 12th house can create a monk who has great progress on the spiritual path, but will spend a lot of time alone. An in-fortunate placement in the 12th house can lead to rotting away in isolation, hospital confinement, social outcast, homelessness, drug use, poverty, and similar losses.

Isolation is a huge theme for the 12th house, but many older guys with families are really craving some private alone time for themselves, while many younger guys are rotting in depression with their alone time. Some people use that isolation for the best, and others use it for the worst.

Jupiter is afflicted in Virgo, but is a benefic planet.

Basically this means you suck up kindness energy from relationships but have trouble returning that same energy. You also may have difficulties in expressing your personality and charisma, due to an afflicted planet on the ascendant.

If you travel to the opposite side of the world for a vacation (astrocartography), you will feel the very interesting effects of the reversal of this placement, which is that you will be forced to treat people with kindness while they will never return the favor, and you will also feel a blockage like you have no power in relationships. However lord of the 1st in the 7th house is great for falling in love, and a lot of good marriage partners have this placement.

>t. have this same placement, so I know how it works
